Introduction

In the early 1970's I was working as a Shipwright in HM Mooring and Salvage Depot Pembroke Dock and became interested in the history of the area and especially of Pennar, collecting information from the older residents and being shown old coins and relics which had been found in the gardens. I wrote down a series of notes and would visit the Records Office in Haverfordwest and the local Library to find out more. There was one big problem -I am dyslexic so spelling is a big challenge.

One Saturday morning a gentleman who was also researching asked me what area I was looking at. He looked over my notes and suggested I them in a logical sequence with references and make some copies. That was the birth of my "Jottings on the History of Pennar" and my widening interest in research on the History of Pembrokeshire

Many of the records are old and over time the spelling of names etc. have changed, as far as possible I have used the original document spelling.

Hundred Notes

Castlemartin Hundred 1847

This district lies nearly within a line drawn from Hobbs Point to Tenby, and was planted with a colony of Flemings who are supposed to have been mercenary soldiers and to have remained Long enough in England to bring the English language with them.

It is upon the whole the best educated district which I found in the counties assigned to me. There are good schools at Redberth, Carew Pater, Warren, Stackpole, and Lamphey, which, although not all of them included within its limits are available for some portion of it. The schools at Warren and Stackpole are maintained by the Earl of Cawder on his own estates. The portions most unprovided with schools are those lying between Pater and Angle, about Cosheston, and between Tenby and Lamphey.

There are in this hundred a greater number of resident gentry and proprietors than in the purely Welsh parts. On one side the dockyard at Pater affords extensive employment, and tends to raise wages; besides being a centre from which habits of regulated industry and improved applications of labour to the various purposes of life must be, to some extent, circulated among the population. At the other extremity, the strangers, who either reside at Tenby or frequent it as a watering hole in the summer, not only circulate a good deal of money, assist local funds, and exercise which much private charity, but also (which is far more important) help by their presence to break through that feeling of isolation in which the lower orders of the Welsh Throughout remoter districts too complacently hug themselves.

On "The State of Education in Wales 1847"

Cilgerran (Kilgerran) Hundred

1847 The State of Education in Wales

The district includes the north east corner of the county. There are Fair schools in Manordieff and Kilgerran in the upper part of it by the River Teifi where there are several resident proprietors who maintain the two schools. But, out of nine parishes in the hundred containing a population of 5211, no less than 5 parishes containing a population of 2458, are without a resident clergyman; and four parishes containing a population of 2115 are without either a day school or a resident clergyman. It will be noted that one of these doubly destitute parishes Cydey contains a population of 1269 souls

Dewisland Hundred

1384 wages Pembrokeshire in By-gone Days

At that time wages in Dewisland were fixed in the Lordship of Pebydiauck by the Bishop of St David's as Lord of the manor, and the Scale in 1384 was regulated by a Statute of Bishop Adam Houghton on 15 July, 1380, which enacted that no common workman in the Lordship of St David's, who did not support a household, should take more than 2d. a day with food, or 3d. per day without food. Master workmen were to be paid 4d. per day unless the Lord should think that they deserved more. Teamsters with their carts were to be paid 6d. only as from old they had been accustomed to receive, and no teamster was to be paid more than 1d. for drawing a full cart-load from Porthclais to the cathedral or to the city of St David's, and in the event of their not loading their carts full, they were to be mulcted of one day's pay.

The Statute further provided that when a bushel of barley was commonly sold for 6d. in the Market place in the city of St David's, the price of ale sold for compulsory work for the Lord of the manor should not exceed 1d. (per gallon), and when the price of barley exceeded 10d. per bushel but did not exceed 6d. per bushel, the price of ale sold for such work was not to exceed 2d.

The Statute also enacted that Bread was to be sold at a just price according to legal weight, and the price of corn, as by the law in England.

Another clause in the same Statute provided that in view of the tricks of dealers in the city of St David's and also outside the city, no one should buy victuals in the city before the third hour of the day, or purchase such victuals on the way to the Market.

Moreover, no one was to prevent provisions from being brought to the Market and exposed for sale, and when provisions were being sold, the Bishop, Canons, and vicar's choral of the cathedral were to have the preference over all other buyers. Workmen were by the same Statute prohibited from going to reap for pay outside the Lordship in harvest time, if work were available within the Lordship, under a penalty of a fine and imprisonment.

The State of Education in Wales 1847

This district embraces the North west Quarter of Pembrokeshire. It is miserably provided with schools and is in other respects much neglected. Out of 21 parishes, containing an aggregate population of 10,840, no less than 12 parishes containing a population of 2392 are utterly unprovided with day schools at all; 13 parishes containing a population of 3401 are without a resident Clergyman; and 11 parishes containing a population of 2462 are without either a day school or resident Clergyman.

I heard on all hands but one account of the gross immorality prevailing among the unmarried population of both sex. Little care is taken to separate the resident male and female servants properly in the farm houses at night; but further than this, the system of bundling, or, at any rate, nightly visits of the men to the women prevails extensively. The unmarried men servants in the farms range the country at night; and it is a known and tolerated practice that they are admitted by the women servants at the houses to which they come. I heard the most revolting anecdotes of the gross and almost bestial indelicacy with which sexual intercourse takes place on these occasions. In the parochial notes, the moral character of the population is generally returned by the Clergy and others as good. It is necessary, however to state, that I found in all parts of my district the common acceptance of the words good character to be an absence of legal rather than moral offences. I have several times been told in answer to a question on the general character of the people of the Parish that "it was very good –not a man of them had joined the Rebecca riots, nor had they ever to be carried before a magistrate".

Dungledy Hundred

The State of Education in Wales 1847

This district excepting the parishes of Uzmaston, Boulston and Slebech, lies between the mail road on the south, the road from Haverfordwest to Fishguard on the west and Carmarthenshire on the east, extending northwards not quite as far as the Prescelly Mountains. The only good schools in it are those at Rudbaxton and Uzmaston. Of the 21 parishes named in it, four (viz. Cilymaenllwyd, Landissilio, Llanfateg and Llangan) are returned in the Hundred of Derllys, Carmarthenshire, Llandewi Velfrey is returned in the hundred of Narberth; and Prendergast in the town of Haverfordwest.

Kemes -Cemais Hundred

Annals and Antiquities of the Counties and County Families of Wales by Thomas Nicholas 1872

The conquest of Cemaes was effected about 1094 by Martin de Tours, a knight who by his name is marked as having originally come from Tours in France. He had settled at first in Devonshire, and came thence to the conquest of this district

Newport before that time was called only by the name which still clings to it in the Welsh-Trifdraeth, and received the new name of Novo-Burgus, since modified into Newport, from the new possessor. Martin de Tours, on the conquest being effected, was invested with the usual attributes of a Lord Marcher; he and his successors were summoned to the sovereign's council as barons, holding in capite from the English Plantagenet King; the territory was constituted a Lordship marcher, having regalia and courts of its own, where all matters affecting life and property were tried; and the barons of Cemmaes continued to be "lordes of the Parliamente of England" up to the time when the Lordship came by descent to the Audeleys, "whoe of themselves before were lordes of the Parliamente, and soe the place of Kemes was drowned in that respect. But whiles it continued in the names of the Martins, the first lordes thereof, and untill it came to the Lorde Audeley they were lordes of Parliamente by the name of Lordes of Cemaes". The third Lord of Cemaes, Sir William Martin, married Angharad, daughter of the Lord Rhys, and thus the family became identified with the people of the country. Sir Thomas D. Lloyd Bart., a lineal descendant of the Martins, first Lords of Cemmaes, and as such himself Lord of the Lordship, is quite entitled to claim the name and rank of Baron of Cemaes- the last Lord Marcher title now subsisting.

The Lordship marcher of Cemaes, as described by the antiquary, George Owen of Henllys, himself its inheritor, extended along the sea-coast from the mouth of the Teivi to Fishguard, and thence southward by a line nearly direct to St. Dogwell's, where it took an eastern direction, passing Castle Henry, Maenclochog, Monachlog-ddu, to Llanfyrnach, its extreme eastern point, and thence northward, west of Frenni Fawr, to the Teivi, below Cilgerran Castle.

Kemes Hundred

– State of Education in Wales 1847

This district includes all the northern coast of Pembrokeshire from Fishguard to Cardigan, and extends some miles to the south of the Prescelly Mountain. On the south-and west it is bounded by the Hundreds of Dungledy and Dewisland, and on the east by that of Kilgerran. It is quite as badly off for education as Dewisland. Of its 26 parishes containing a population of 15559, no less than 13 parishes, containing a population of 3460, are without a day school at all; 14 parishes containing a population of 3773, are without a resident Clergyman; and 12 parishes containing a population of 2386 are without either a day school or resident Clergyman. In the whole of the country between Fishguard and Dinas to the north, and the Prescelly Mountain on the south, there is no day school. I rode over most of it. The population is scattered, and lives in a very poor manner. A great part of the country appeared to be hardly reclaimed. The schools most resorted to are the Sunday schools in Puncheston and Llanychlwydog. Some few children, who are within reach of Dinas, go to the day schools there; but, even putting poverty and the small inducements which such schools offer out of sight, the distance and the nature of the roads must prevent the young families of scattered cottagers from getting even thus much education during the greater part of the year. I had some conversation with the superintendent of Jabez Sunday School in Llanychlwydog, a better sort of farmer, living in a comfortable way, and apparently upward of 30 years old. He wrote a good hand, spoke English correctly, and appeared a shrewd intelligent man. He talked much of “the want of schools, and that the poor severely felt it”, but he declared at the same time that “if a day school was to be under clerical control no children would attend it. There were no Church people in the parish. He was against religious instruction of any sort in day schools”

The state of the churches exemplifies the neglect in which the population of these parishes is left. Churchwardens are never appointed. The churches at Llandeilo and Maenclochog are in ruins. I entered that at Morfyl. The panes of the chancel window were all out, and the inside of the Church was as wet as if it had just been rinsed with water – as, indeed, it had been, for the afternoon was windy and rainy.

Narberth Hundred

Introduction

John Childs (Captain (mine owner) and Landowner 1847) stated

This is a mineral and coal district; and now in contemplation to build four new furnaces for the smelting of iron. This will greatly increase the demand for all, and therefore juvenile, labour. It becomes then the more important to provide such means of education as shall convey the greatest possible amount of instruction in the short time that is likely to be allowed for schooling; for it is scarcely to be calculated that from the increased demand for labour the children will be continued at school beyond 10 years of age.

Note --Saundersfoot is not mentioned in most of the older sources although Owen does mention it in his description of the coalfield. It would have appeared originally a small fishing village. The Parish is listed as St Issell and appear to have been part of Coydrath Forest.

Despite the present day tourist attractions this area had a heavy industrial past. The majority of the Hundred is situated on the Pembrokeshire coal field which was a source of high quality anthracite needed for industry and especially the coal fire railways and steam ships of the 1800's also culm for households. The industry died with the last mine closing in 1948 but in the preceding century it and the iron foundry had been major employers, bringing much wealth to the local landowners. Most traces of the squalid houses that the workers lived in have rotted away but I have included the records of these times including those of the courts and inquests. (See Begelly Education report 1847)

I have a personal interest, my ancestors worked in the mines and my great grandfather was killed in a mining accident when the rope of a chair they were using to inspect the leaking shaft wall broke. It was three months before the bodies were brought up from the pit sump. There was no compensation for my great grandmother and her cottage was a tied one so she had to get out. My other great grandmother lost her Husband down a pit when he was 41, she at the age of 35 was left with eleven children but fortunately for her it was found, at the inquest, that negligence was involved in her Husband's death and she held the lease of her terraced house with three tons of coal a year until she died (age 96).

1841 Evidence Collected By Robert Hugh Franks, esq.. Collieries In Pembrokeshire. For Mines Act 1842

Mr. M. Whettow, agent, Nolton Colliery.

"Children are not required in our mines under 12 years of age. A limitation of age is desirable."

Nolte Colliery, parish of Roch, county of Pembroke.

Messrs. Bowen, Whittow and Co.,

Number of persons employed:-

	Males		Females
Adults	24	Adults	4
Under 18	14	Under 18	0
Under 13	3	Under 13	0

No.419. Mr. W. Whittow, agent.

Steam power, 30 horses.

Our mine is entered by shaft, 36 fathoms (1 fathom = 6ft) from the surface depth and we ventilate by air pits. Little or no bad air, or foul gas exists and no accident whatever has occurred from such accumulations since the operations commenced. Our machinery is daily inspected by the foreman and not more than four are allowed to ascend or descend together. Only one serious accident within the last two years, viz. a man was killed while coming up the shaft by incautiously holding the rope by hands only which caused him to drop when half way up.

Our coal is brought from the workings by young people from 13 to 18 years of age. Seventeen males and one female. None draw by the girdle and chain. The distance they draw is 120 fathoms and two boys drive to mouth of the shaft about 30 fathoms. The weight of coal in the corve is 6 cwt. Children are not required in our mines under 12 years of age as the vein is four feet thick, and the least height on the ways is three feet. A limitation of age is certainly desirable at which children should enter mines; I think 11 or 12 years might be fixed upon. The usual number of hours which our people labour rarely more than 8 to 10

NOTES:- This would appear to be the only colliery in the St Bride's Bay to replied to the report or to have been inspected.

Also the strata of the Seams or Veins in this area were folded with fault outcrops and would frequently dip at 20 to 30 degrees.

Coal and Culm Mining

Extract from the British Geological Survey (BGS) 11th October, 2008 site visit by Dr J R Davies to Broadhaven report

“Mining within the Pembrokeshire Coalfield appears to have reached its zenith in the latter half of the 18th Century, from when it rapidly declined. As a result, sources of information are lacking for large parts of the coalfield, and the relationships between coal seams within different areas are not fully understood. Much of the coal was worked in a piecemeal manner from opencast pockets (‘slashes’ or ‘slatches’) as, and when, they were discovered, although underground working also took place.”

THIS district lies on the western side of the county between-Dewisland hundred to the north, and Castlemartin (from which it is separated by Milford Haven) on the south. Its western boundary may be roughly taken as the road from Fishguard to Haverfordwest. Of the 97 parishes, or parts of parishes, included in it, with a population of 14,777, five only, with a population of 991, are utterly without a day-school Yet most of the schools in it are of an utterly inefficient character, and large portions of it here and there are very destitute Between Haverfordwest and Burton there is no school worth mentioning, except that supported by J. H. Philipps, esq., at Williamston, quite down at the south. Yet the upper part of this quarter comprises a considerable Mining population. Some of the cottages about Freystrop were the worst and dirtiest that I saw in Wales. In more than one, pigs and poultry were going in and out. A large school is much wanted here—another in Llanstadwell parish— another somewhere about Hasguard. -January 1847 Wm Morris Assistant

Early Records ---Pre Historic

John Fenton wrote to his father an account of his excavation of the Orielton tumuli, of which the following is an extract:—

“30th September, 1811. Opened one of the tumuli on Dry Barrows near Orielton discovered large and well-formed kist: cover stone 4 feet long. 3 feet wide and 6 inches thick depth 3 1/2 ft. Human bones, partly burned - charcoal – bits of coal -- no weapon, urn, or any ornament found in this barrow. Field called Hangman field

1st October In another barrow no kist, but interment had been made in a most irregular manner Bones had been first burned on surface of natural soil, and afterwards collected in four different heaps – immense quantities of charcoal, mixed with a much greater proportion of new and hard coal

1595 George Owen Pembrokeshire

(English language and spelling of the period)

Most of the gentlemen of the sheere are well servid with wood for their fuel; but for the most parte, those that dwell neere the Cole, or that may have it caried by water with ease use most Cole fiers in their kitchings, and some in their Halles because it is a ready fiere and very good and sweete to rost and boyle meate and voyd of smoake, where yll chymnies are, and doth not require a man's labour to cleve wood and feede the fiere continually. Nest unto the wood, or rather to be preffered before it for fuell, is colefiere, for the generalities of it, as that which serveth most people and especially the cheefe townes. This Cole may be nominate as one of the cheeffe commodities of this countrey, as without it the countrey would be in great distress. It is called stone Cole for the hardness thereof, and is burned in chimneies and grates of iron; and being once kindled giveth a greater heate then light and deliteth to burse in darke places: it serveth alsoe for Smithes to worke wit,

He goes on to describe the methods of coal extraction

“The diggin of this Cole is of ancient tymes used in Penbrokeshire, but not in such extent and skilfull sorte as now it is; for in former tymes they used not engines for lifting up of the Coles out of the pitt but made their entrances slope, soe as the people carried the Coles upon their backs along stayers which they called landwayes: whereas nowe they sinke their pittes downe right foure square about six or seaven foote square and with a wyndles turnid by fouremen, they drawwupp the colesa barell full at once by rope: this they call a downright dore. The lords of the land have eyther rent or the third barrel, after all charges of the worke deducted.

The Cole is first found by a small appearance thereof, which they call edge, which being found, they search which way the veyne leaneth, and on the cotraire side they begin to sinke for the coal is found to lye slopein the ground, and seldom down right; the Cole being found the workmen follow the veyne every way, until it ende, or be letted by water or rocke, the veyne will not be for the most parts passing five or six feet deepe soe that the Cole is caried stooping; for they commonly leave a foote of Cole in the bottome undigged to serve for a strong foundation, except they finde the rocke underfoot which they calle the Deen Stone which if they find then they dig cleane all the Cole and further then that stone they looke for noe cloe; and overhead they are driven to tymber their worke to keepe the earth from falling, which is chargeable; but in some grounds they have a rocke above, and then they save much labour and cost in sparing of tymber.

In these workes the water springs are troublesom, which they avoid by sinking a great pit right under the dore, to which all the water will run, and from thence draw it up with a wyndles, by barrells or els by making a levell (as they call it) which is by a waye digged underground, somewhat lower then the worke , to bring a passage for the water; this is very chargeable, and may cost sometimes £20. and often more.

They now most commonly sinke down right twelve , sixteen or twenty fathoms before they come to the Cole , whereas in old tymes four fathoms was counted a great labour; when they finde it, they worke sundrie holes , one for every digger some two, some three or four, as the number of diggers are; each man working by candlelight and sitting while he worketh; then having they bearers which are boyes that beare the Coles in sitt basketts on their backes, going alwayes stooping, by reason of the lownes of the pitt; each bearer carieth this basket six fathome, where upon a benche of stone he layeth it; where meeteth him another boy with an empty basket, which he giveth him, and taketh that which is full of Coles, and carrieth it as farre; where another meeteth him, and soe till they come under the doore, where it is lifted up. In one pitt where will be sixteen persons, whereof there will be three picjaxes digging seaven bearers, one filler, four winders, twoe ridlers who ridle the Coles when it is lande, first tp draw the small coal from the bigg, by one kind of rydell, then the second rydling with a smaller rydell, with which they drawe smaller Coles for the Smythes from the colme, which is indeed very dust, which serveth for lyme burning. These persons will lande about eighty or a hundred barrells of Cole in a day. There tooles about this work are picaxes with a round pole, wedges and sledges to batter the rockes that crosse their worke.

All tymes of the yeare in indifferent for working, but the hott weather worst by reason of sodaine [sudden] dampes that happen which oftentimes cause the workmen to found and will not suffer the candells to burne, but the flame waxing blew of collor, will of themselves go out. They worke from six a clock to six a clock, and reste an hour at Noone, and eat their allowance as they terme it, which is 6d in bred to every man, and 4d in drinke among a dozen: this is of custome on the charge of the pitt, although they worke on their owne charge. All their worke is by candell-light throughout the yeare.

The Cole they finde is eyther an ore Cole, a string, or a slatche, as I have learnid their termes.

The ore is the best and is a great veyne spreading everyway and enduring Longest; The string is a small narrow vayne, sometymes two, three, or four foote in bigness, and runneth down right, and is always found betweene two rocks; a slatche they call a piece of Cole by itselfe found in the earth is quickly digged about, and no more to be found of the peece. The first of those three sorts is the best, then the next, and the last countid worst of all.

The dangers in digging these Coles, is the falling of the earth, and quelling the poore, or stopping of the way forth and soe dye by famine, or els the sodain irruption of standing waters in old works.

The workmen of this blacke labour observe all abolished holy dayes, and cannot be wayned from that follye”

1842 Children's Employment Commission

REPORT by Robert Hugh FRANKS, esq., on the Employment of Children and Young Persons in the Collieries and the Iron- Works of South Wales, the district of Merthyr Tydvil, the collieries of Monmouthshire, Glamorganshire and Pembrokeshire and on the State, Condition and Treatment of such Children and Young Persons.

An exact total of persons and children employed could not be obtained as several have not made their return and other have objected to do so.

Children under 13. In the divisions in which the ages of these employed in the collieries and manufactures are relatively classed there is no provision for the entry of the particular ages of young children under the age of 13 years. It can scarcely be said to be an uncommon occurrence for a Child to work at the early age of five years and a half. This is the youngest age at which I myself have found any employed but Mr. Thomas Josephs, mineral agent for the Plymouth Works, Merthyr Tydvil, in his evidence, states, “children are employed as air-door keepers at 5 years of age, as horse-drivers at 14, as colliers at 12 years of age.”

Mr. Nathaniel Morgan, agent to Sir Thomas Phillips says on the subject, “young boys are taken down as soon as they can stand on their legs.” and Mr. William Strange, medical assistant, Llanvabon also states, “they [the people] certainly had a bad practice here of taking children down as soon as they can creep about, many as early as five or six years of age.”

Pembrokeshire Mining

In the county of Pembrokeshire the field or bed of coal is what is called anthracite or stone-coal and in many parts the angle is so highly inclined as to demand a particular form of labour. Supposing a vein of coal to lie at an angle of 45 degrees, windlasses are fixed at convenient distances on the incline on the vein by which means (if the mine is worked by adit or level and above the adit) the coal, after being brought from the stalls to the stage of the windlass in carts or skips, is dropped by the chain of the windlass down the incline to the level road and the empty carts are worked up the stage on which the windlass is fixed by the opposite chain of the windlass. If, on the contrary, the coal is worked to the dip, the coal is in a similar manner worked up to a convenient stage by windlass and then taken by shaft to the surface.

Windlass-women.

These windlasses are worked by women and their labour is certainly severe, though only of eight or ten hour's duration.

Hours of Work. Collieries.

In the collieries of South Wales the hours of work are generally from six in the morning until six at night including the time given to meals and as in collieries and iron works, the labour of children and young person's accompanies the labour of the adult workmen, their hours of labour are of the same duration as the labour of men.

Meals.

The children and young person's employed in collieries generally take to their work Bread and cheese for their meal in the day time for which, however, no fixed time is set aside. The haulier eats his food as he drives his horse along. The little air door boy may take his meal when he pleases and as the colliers are.

Treatment and Care.

The industry and the cleanliness of the female population of South Wales are apparent in their persons and homes and I am led to believe that their children, in infancy, are the objects of tender maternal solicitude and if the Welsh mother knew of the dangers which awaited the physical constitution of her Child by its exposure to the foul air of the colliery at the immature age of five years, no legislative enactment would be required to limit the age at which the boy should commence work. In general, the Welsh women are remarkable for attention to warm clothing, which they secure for themselves in woollens and flannels &c. Nor are they less anxious for their husbands and children. The man and children are always well defended against the general inclemency of the mountain country. On the return from work it is usual for the workmen and children to be washed. In fact, in lodging houses it is art of the bargain that the lodger shall be washed every night previous to retiring to rest. A point which, by the way, is strenuously insisted by the housekeeper. At five years of age, however, arise the call for labour. To add an extra half-crown per week to the wages of the father, the Child is sent into the mine. From this period the mother seems to consider herself relieved of the responsibility for the treatment and care of her Child. That Child follows a new teacher, a new instructor. The father or employer becomes the object of his imitation. He drinks. He smokes, and swears, The Child follows his example and the children of seven years of age and even less, will be found to enter in their expenses at the shop their supply of tobacco and the evidence will show that swearing, drinking and obscene language are all too frequent amongst the young. Education is a subject to which the working people seem to attach little value. Ignorant themselves, and never having suffered severe distress, they note no distinction in the wages of the boy or the man who can Read or write and those who do not and they cannot appreciate the value of that education of which they themselves never know the want. The consequence is that the children if they so to Sunday school are sent rather as a Mark of respect to those who recommend education, than from any esteem of the benefits to be derives from instruction. Parents are careless of the attendance of their children at school and it has been observed to me that in a free school opened for the instruction of the children of working people, copy books, &c., were expected to be found for the children and because they were not found the children were withdrawn from school.

It is difficult to get children to attend the Sunday School for the same cause, the carelessness of parents and it is to be laments that numerous as are the Chapels of many denominations of Christians and large as they are the congregations which at the appointed hours of public worship throng these Chapels both in the week and in the Sunday, the spiritual education of the young seems to be grossly neglected.

It is much to be lamented that few or no efforts are made to facilitate a change in their habits of the manufacturing and mining populations of South Wales. A little time and though given to the welfare of the people would not only tend to wean them from the gross habits in which they indulge but would produce abundance if kindly felling between the employer and the employed. It has been suggested that the establishment in mining or manufacturing districts of reading rooms of the better sort, of decently conducted coffee rooms with books, periodicals, &c. for the working man, together with familiar lectures on matters connected work the labour of each district and this not conducted with too strict a hand or under the imposing titles of Athenaeum, Mechanic's Institute or Temperance Hall but rather in an inviting and conciliatory spirit that in the exclusive tone which too often mars the effect of such well-intended attempts and in the villages a little more of wholesome incitement to excellence in the distribution of small prizes for the best cottage, the best garden &c., would be productive of immense good, nor can these things be done with half efficacy by others as by those who are residents amongst the people themselves. A personal interest in the people and the distribution of but a small fund in each district to the humble purposes alluded to, would invite the labourer from the vulgar line he now treads in. As matter stand at the moment, in the largest manufacturing town (Methyr Tydvil), the working man after labour has no resort but the beer shop. His boy accompanies him, his daughter often passed the evening there. It is unnecessary to pursue this further. It is not intended to be inferring that the collier or mining or manufacturing population is to be changed by one sudden movement but it surely a source of great regret that a small proportion of the enormous wealth of the land and some of the influence of larger proprietors, should not be applied to the improvement of the moral and educational condition of its inhabitants, the productive sources of that wealth.

Of the girls it may be said, although perhaps the age at which they commence labour, excepting as air-girls, is not so early as that of boys, still their usefulness in the house to assist the mother in cleaning, scouring, nursing, and fetching water, which latter is a heavy and fatiguing part of the girl's duty, is a plausible reason for their being kept away from school.

Interference seems rarely to be the vice of the women of South Wales and however frequent and early the connection of the sexes may be, the cases of bastardy are comparatively trifling. It being usual, as I am informed, for a youth to marry a girl when discovered to be pregnant by him.

Many instances of improvidence occur as may be expected from such early marriage, A mere Child of 14 becomes a wife and her first important act is to open an account at the shop for goods, clothing and food. This facility of procuring goods to the credit of her husband's labour induces extravagance in clothing, food and other modes of increased expenditure.

Hiring and Wages.

The usual mode of hiring in the collieries, iron works, tin works and copper works of South Wales is by the month.

In many instances, in the works under inquiry, where certain proportions of work are taken by the job, the younger hands are employed by the men and not by the master and the terms on which they are hired are of course determined by the adult whom they assist and in the collieries the collier boy is, to all intents and purposes, the property of his father (as to wages) until he attains the age of 17 years or marries, His father receives his wages, whether he be an air-boy of five years of age or a haulier of 15.

A very absurd custom exists amount the colliers in South Wales, a custom which, however, is by no means confined to this particular country of claiming and being allowed privilege of work for a male Child taken into the mine, in some instances indeed the same privilege is claimed for girls. I am informed, no matter the infant's age, strength or capacity, into the mine he must be taken to enable the father to claim an extra tram of coals, that is to say, supposing a given number of men working a colliery, and the quantity of coal desired to be raised being limited, the full day labour of a collier not being required, it is obvious that each workman must be reduced below his usual work. To remedy this, in the case of a man with a family, the system of privileges seems to have been devised and by this means the married man works for himself perhaps a full day's work. By this circuitous mode of giving the man with a family a chance of extra work, the unfortunate Child, who of course is of little use to his father, is taken into an unwholesome atmosphere from his mother's side and deprived of the slender means of education afforded. It being at the same time obvious to the end proposed (viz. Allowing the married collier extra work) might be secured by handing in a certificate to the oversman, or any other convenient proof, of the existence of such a Child, &c., and the Child at the same time might be kept out of the mine.

Physical Condition.

For an estimate of the physical condition of the working population, both infant and adult in the districts through which I passed, I beg to refer to the evidence of the medical gentlemen

Colliers Health.

That amongst colliers the diseases most prevalent are chronic diseases of the respiratory organs, especially asthma and bronchitis arising probably from inhalation of atmosphere charged with carbon &c.

I have not been able to ascertain for want of sufficient data the average duration of a collier's life but it is admitted that such average duration is less than that of a common labourer.

In the county of Pembroke, however, James Bowen, esq., surgeon, Narbeth, in that county informs me:-

"The average life of a collier is about 40. They rarely attain 45 years of age and in the entire population of Begelly and East Williamson, being 1163, forming, strictly speaking a mining population, there are not six colliers of 60 years of age."

The Rev. Richard Buckby, rector of Begelly in answer to one of the Queries in the Educational Paper of the Central Board, writes:-

"The foul air of the mines seriously affects the lungs of children and young persons employed therein and shortens the term of life. In a population of 100 there are not six colliers 60 years of age."

"The employment of children in the mines at a very early age tends to produce disease by exposing a constitution not matured to foul air but other causes contribute to this effect. Such children are very much exposed to wet and cold, especially during winter and the rainy season. They are moreover deprived of solar light which is as necessary to the proper development of animals as vegetables."

James Bowen, esq., surgeon, Narbeth (whose evidence I have had occasions to refer to), states:-

"The practice of taking children down into the mines at the present early age had a manifest tendency to shorten the average duration of human life and it is highly desirable, in my opinion, that children should not be taken down before 12 years of age."

Accidents.

I was desirous of ascertaining the whole number of accidents that have happened in the different mines and works which I have personally visited but it is much to be regretted that an apparent unwillingness to communicate exists amongst those who alone are capable of affording the requisite information. At present, it would seem, no record whatever is kept of accidents, either by the medical gentlemen, which is invariably attached to each work, or in any of the books of the particular firm.

In order, however, that I might be enabled to lay before you such materials as should be sufficient to show the importance of this branch of the inquiry and the very unsatisfactory and inefficient means of affording of estimating its extent,

In perusing the general body of evidence your attention will have been to the effect that there is a general laxity in the administration of justice particularly with reference to inquests held in cases of fatal accidents, and the mode of proceeding is thus described:-

"When a man dies the viewer looks at the body and sends to the coroner and unless a case of suspicion is made to the coroner, he does not come, but sends an order to the constable to bury and frequently the coroner does not attend until there are five or six cases to clear off."

Or thus, by other witness:-

“When a death (i.e. accidental, or out of the ordinary course of nature) occurs a communication is made with the coroner, he issues his warrant and, through the constable appoints a jury and the coroner seldom visits us until there are five or six cases to be disposed of.”

It had been represented to me that in cases of fatal accidents, which, however, have not been of sufficient magnitude to rouse public attention, many difficulties lie in the way of obtaining an impartial, for the jury in many instances, selected from the fellow workmen of the deceased and who are willing to hear, even if they think it unnecessary to call, evidence which may possibly involved either their employer or any one employed in the same work as themselves and it is not improbable that, from the difficulty of carrying out the useful objects of the office of coroner, the benefits to be derived from a proper administration of the important office amongst a population so exposed to frightful accidents as those engaged in the iron works are not duly appreciated. There exists, besides, a feeling amongst the people themselves, especially those of the country, averse to keeping a dead body above ground more than a clear day, nor in some places will they work while the body is above ground and in a conversation with Mr. Rees, of Cardiff, that gentleman stated he had no doubt that if the coroner did not attend on such occasions, or an order were not sent to the constable. The relatives would bury without an order whatever. This, however, proves but the existence of a strong prejudice and custom, which I think it would met be difficult to repress by punishing all engaged in such informal burial as for misdemeanour's.

Means of education.

It will be seem that the means of education are adequate only to the education of a very small proportion of the rising generations and that it is those districts where a greater number of schools presents greater opportunities to the population, the want of a proper appreciation of the benefits of education prevents them from availing themselves of the advantages presented.

From a careful examination of the collected evidence and from attentive inquire into the several subjects distinguished in this Report, I submit to you the following points as to the result of my investigations:-

1. - That labour, in the collieries of Glamorgan and Pembroke in South Wales and of Monmouth in England is unwholesome and productive of diseases which have a tendency either to shorten life or reduce the number of years of useful labour in the mechanic.
2. - That the physical health and strength of children and young persons are deteriorated by their employment at the early ages and in the works before enumerated.
3. - That the education, both secular and religious, of the children of the working population is lamentably defective the means of instruction small and the slender opportunities afforded of intellectual, moral and religious culture, diminished by the early age at which children commence working.
4. - That a restriction of the age at which children should be allowed to labour in the mines and works should be fixed, and young girls altogether excluded from such labour and together with such measures that an educational qualification to labour should be established Throughout the Mining and manufacturing district of South Wales and Monmouthshire.

Long the home of wood-turners who, until recent times, pursued their art in a manner almost unchanged since the Early Iron Age.

Woodturning Traditions

- of the Davies Brothers Spoons, Ladles, Platters, Axe, Handles and Stools By GARETH JONES Craftsmen of Wales - The Western Mail 21st July, 1933 .

Three Joneses in Cenarth, Cardiganshire, were discussing wooden spoons - Sam Jones, the Miller, David Jones, the blacksmith, and myself.

Sam said: "Thirty years ago it was wood everywhere. For meat we use wooden dishes. My mother used to serve the meat on wood always. You rarely saw anything except wooden spoons and "ffiolau pren." They used to be rougher "mwy o lwmpyn," but now they make them daintier. If you would like to see some I shall fetch them."

Sam went into his farmhouse and returned with spoons some of which had become black and brown with age, and one of which was 40 years old. I was told the spoons were made at Abercych by James Davies, the wood turner.

I set out for Abercych,

I found Mr. Davies in his factory. In various parts of the workshop were hundreds of shovel handles, axe handles and mandril handles, for James Davies is not a craftsman in his spare time, but is an efficient whole-time wood-turner and handle-maker, and carries on the trade for which Abercych has been famous for centuries.

"How long has your family been in the wood-turning craft?" I asked him.

"With the coracle men I can say", he replied, "from time immemorial. Abercych is the real home of the old industry. As late as the middle seventies, seven different families, all related were in the trade and most of the inhabitants of Abercych earned their living by making spoons, ladles, bowls, platters and stools. I know my great-great-grandfather was in the craft".

"I am myself 58 years old and remember seven different small workshops here in the village, each workshop with the pole lathe and all the families bearing the name of Davies and related".

"Before the War we were four working in the trade, my father, my two brothers and myself. I was the eldest, my brother John, the second, went to live in Cwm Lancych about 1914 and my other brother was killed in the War".

Twin Mills

Mr. Davies is now working with his two sons. I was shown two water wheels, one of which provided power for the turning factory, and the other, by its side, power for a flour mill. Surely there can be no place in where a flour mill stands side by side by a wood-turning factory driven by the same mill-stream. "Your main work is, therefore, no longer hand-turning and making bowls and spoons", I said. "No, we chiefly make handles. We send thousands of miners' mandrel handles, axe and sledge handles to , Cross Hands, Tumble. Those handles you see over there are going to Pontyberem, and those to Cwmllynfell". "But you still make wooden spoons and bowls?" "Yes, and some people beg of me to make more. I could sell many more than I make, but the work is very slow". To make the wooden vessels Mr. James Davies used to work a pole lathe, but now his factory has several modern lathes driven by water-power.

About thirteen years ago he made a test of the old pole lathe and the power lathe. His father worked one and he the other, making bowls. After working all the day the power-driven lathe was only a bowl or two in front, owing to the time it took to do the important work of "chucking" and "re-chucking" the bowls.

Mr. James Davies has the: reputation of being the best turner that Abercych has seen in using the Hook tools ("cyllell lam"), and his spoons and bowls reveal that he is one of the most skilled of craftsmen. "You should see my brother's work", he says when congratulated on his skill. "He spends all his spare time in making spoons and bowls and still has the old pole lathe".

"Where does he live?" "His farm is in Llancych, up the valley".

Wooden Bowls

When I left Mr. James Davies and drove up the Cych glen I realised why the neighbourhood was famous for its wood-turning. I have seen no valley in Wales more thickly wooded, and sycamores beloved of the wood-turner, grow every where.

Near the residence of the late Sir Marteine Lloyd lies the farm of John Davies. The lawn in front of the clean cottage was covered with fleece. Mrs. Davies welcomed me, and told me that John had been out in the hay, but would come immediately. When he came, with ruddy cheeks and slightly curly reddish hair, he showed me the wooden bowls which he takes to Cardigan Fair every week.

Outside, off the farmyard, he has his workshop, where he keeps a foot lathe as a curiosity and the hand lathe which he now uses. He demonstrated how he first uses his axe on the rough wood and how the big block is carved to the final smooth graceful bowl.

So Very Old

The tradition of the Davies brothers is far older than Welsh people imagine. It goes back much farther than the days when the Mabinogion made the Cych renowned. It goes back to prehistoric days. Dr. Cyril Fox and Mr. Iorwerth Peate, of the National Museum of Wales, have shown that the objects made by the West Wales turners resemble in a striking manner the wooden utensils from the dwellings.

Mr. Iorwerth Peate, in his contribution on "Some Welsh Wood-turners," in that valuable compilation of work by Aberystwyth students, "Studies in Regional Consciousness and Environment," writes: "When the evidence of folk tales of buried cities in inland Welsh lakes (e.g., Maesllyn in the Tregaron bog) is also recalled, it can be argued with some probability that the tradition of wood-turning so admirably developed in the central European lake dwellers, brought to West Britain via the Glastonbury lake dwellers, has been prolonged to our own day in the work of the West Wales turners."

Abermawr Cable Station.

The First Cables were laid in 1862 by the Cable Ship Berwick. It was over 60 miles long and ran from Abermawr to Wexford. A second cable was laid in 1880 from Abermawr to Blackwater Ireland. There was a corrugated iron hut at Abermawr with benches for the telegraphs. It also had bunks as sleeping quarters for the operators. Messages were retransmitted from here to the London Office. During the first World War the station provided an important link with North America and so was guarded by a small number of soldiers. In the early twenties a storm damaged the cables and the site was abandoned.

Ambleston,

1844 Ambleston Topographical Dictionary of Wales Lewis.

Ambleston, a parish, in the union of Haverfordwest, hundreds of Dungledy, county of Pembroke, South Wales, 8 miles (North North East) from Haverfordwest containing 605 inhabitants. This place has been identified as the site of the long sought for

Roman station Ad Vigesium,

Noticed in the Itineraries, as the first from Maridunum, or Carmarthen, from which the distance corresponds exactly with that mentioned in the Itinerary. The discovery, which, from a variety of concurrent testimony, appears to be founded on truth, was made in the year 1805, by Mr. Fenton, author of the "Historical Tour through Pembrokeshire," accompanied by Sir Richard Colt Hoare, Bart., while collecting materials for that work. The form of the station, which is situated about a mile to the north-east of the Church, is nearly a perfect square, having the Angles rounded off, and comprehends an area two hundred and sixty feet in dimensions: the agger by which it was enclosed, though nearly effaced by tillage, may still be accurately traced: and the Via Julia, leading from Maridunum to Menapia, passes through the centre of the area. The camp is called by the inhabitants Castel Flemish, from having been subsequently occupied by the Flemings, who first settled in this part of the principality, in order to assist in subjugating the natives; and another Roman road, more to the north, and afterwards uniting with the Via Julia near St David's, is from the same source designated Via Flandrica, or "the Flemish way." Within the area of the station have been found Roman bricks and cement, part of a stuccoed floor, a large flagstone bearing an inscription, now lost, and other Roman relics. At a short distance to the west, near the village of Ford, are the remains of a smaller camp, evidently of Roman construction, and probably the Campus Aestivus of the station; and in the same neighbourhood were discovered, in 1806, the remains of a Roman hypocaust, six feet in depth, and eight feet long on each side with stone and cement, from which two flues of one foot four inches in the aperture, and widening towards the upper extremity, rose in an angular direction to the surface; they were formed of fluted Roman bricks.

The lands in this parish are, with a very trifling exception, all enclosed, and the soil is in general fertile; the rateable annual value being returned at £970. 10. The living is a discharged vicarage, rated in the King's Books at £3. 19. 4. 1/2., endowed with £600 royal bounty, and £200 parliamentary grant; present net income, £183; it is in the gift of the crown; impropiator, Lloyd Phillips, esq.

The Church is dedicated to St. Mary. There is a Chapel of ease in the parish, called Rinaston Chapel. The Calvinistic Methodists have a place of worship here. In a day school 26 children are instructed at the expense of their parents; and a Sunday school, consisting of 88 males and 81 females, is supported by the Calvinistic Methodists.

The Roman station Ad Vigesium, on the Via Julia Maritima, occurs about a mile NE of the Church, and bears popularly the name of Castle Flemish. The living is a vicarage in the diocese of St Davids. Value, £183. Patron, the Lord Chancellor. There is a Calvinistic Methodist Chapel.

1923 Castle Flemish; Castle Fleming (Ad Vigesium?)

There are good indications that the earthwork at Castle Flemish enclosed a Roman villa, or romanised farmstead, probably including a bathhouse, occupied from the late first century AD onwards. Legends of a golden table buried on the site have not been disproved.

It is an irregular quadrilateral banked enclosure, about 90m east-west by 82m, round-angled and straight sided, set on ground falling gently to the south. The site was identified with the spurious 'Ad Vigesium' of Richard of Cirencester; brick was noted here through the nineteenth century, along with persistent reports of inscribed stones and of a golden table. Trenching and pitting over three days in December of 1922, determined that the greater part of the interior had been cleared and levelled, most test-pits producing only fragments of brick and slate. A section taken across the bank close to the south-west angle showed that this was some 6.0m wide, survived to 1.0m high, and was separated from a ditch, some 4.0m wide and at least 2.1m deep, by a 1.0m wide berm. The front of the rampart is thought to have been stone kerbed, or revetted. A trench in the south-eastern part of the enclosure recorded a sequence of two clay floors and their substructures, about 0.48m of Roman stratigraphy being recorded; the upper floor may have extended over an area of up to 9.0m overall, with evidence of a hearth, or partition, and was associated with hexagonal roofing slates; a later first to earlier second century ceramic assemblage pre-dated this later floor. Unstratified finds of flue-tile fragments imply the presence of a heated apartment, presumably part of a bathhouse.

Earthworks at Castell Fleming - "Ad Vigesium"

This enclosure measuring 303 foot from East to west by 294 foot from North to South, occupies commanding ground 500 foot above sea level which slopes slightly to the south. The lines of the northern and southern banks are fairly traceable as is also the southern half of the western bank but the other half and most of the eastern side have disappeared. At no point does the bank rise above one foot. There are no indications of an outer ditch or trench. The enclosure, about two acres in extent, is traversed by a main road which divides it into two practically equal parts. The site has long been under cultivation, with the exception of a triangular plot immediately south of the road in the SE quarter.

The superficial resemblance of the plan to that of a Roman station led Fenton and Hoare to identify it with the Ad Vigesium of the "Itinerary" of Richard of Cirencester not at that time known to be a forgery. Fenton saw Roman brick and cement and heard of "a large flag that had been found near with some inscription on it perhaps a military" A writer in Arch. Camb. 1879 says that the "encampment" was then "full of Roman brick".

Some trial trenches dug by Professor R C Bosanquet and Dr. R E M Wheeler in Dec. 1922 showed that the earth rampart and ditch were of Roman type and had enclosed at least one building of timber with slate roof and clay floor. These remains were exposed in the triangular plot mentioned above which had been preserved from the plough by piles of stone removed from adjoining ground and was covered with dense growth of bracken. Several pieces of flue tiles and bricks such as were used in hypocausts were found above the surface of a clay floor 2 ½ inches thick. The part that was laid bare showed remains of two raised clay hearths and a post-hole about 3 inches in diameter. The floor rested on a bedding of cobbles, and below this was an earlier occupation layer partly floored with clay resting on some 7 inches of fine gravel. A number of hexagonal roofing slates of characteristic Roman type were found on the upper clay floor and some fragments occurred in and below it. The minor finds included two bones and iron nail a fragment of glass and a dozen pieces of Pottery of which five were "Samian". The Pottery was found below the upper clay floor and points to the early part of the second century AD as the first occupation.

Castle or Castell Fleming or Flemish RCAM

NB. As to the name Castle or Castell Fleming or Flemish it may be suggested that the first word "Castle" has been taken from the fortification which has been proved by the excavations of Professor Bosanquet and Dr Wheeler to have been a small Roman settlement. The second word "Flemish" or "Fleming" doubtless has reference to the race or family of the person into whose possession the "Castle" may have passed and who may actually have used it as a defensive post in the days when the colony of Flemish introduced into the county by Henry I were obliged to make the position good by strenuous fighting. One of the leaders of the Flemish was a knight called Wiz or Wizo termed the Fleming. His chief residence was at Wizo's tun which soon became altered to Wiston where there is a fine Castle mound. From Wiston it is evident that Wiz ruled directly or exercised suzerainty over a wide extent of country comprising much of the cantrefs of Dougleddau and Rhos. He was a patron of the Knights Hospitallers of St. John and it said by some authorities to have founded the house of that order at Slebech. It is certain that he or his son Walter endowed the knights with the tithes of several parishes one of them being Ambleston.

1920 The Parish Church dedicated to St. Mary. RCAM

Diocese and Archdeaconry of St David's; Rural deanery of Dungleddy

This Church consists of Nave 42ft x 16 1/2ft chancel 30ft x 28ft and western tower 19 1/2ft x 18 1/2 ft. In 1906 the nave and chancel were rebuilt on the original foundations none of the earlier features being retained. The tower is of two storeys the lower being vaulted. The stair-turret projects at the north east angle. The tower has a slight batter to within two feet of the ground. The battlements and low spire were repaired in 1779. The entrance to the Church is through the tower. At a restoration about 1833 the original font with its circular shaft and square base were sold by public auction but in 1903 it was returned to the Church. The bowl has an interior diameter of 18 inches. It is of the Norman type but is entirely unornamented. In the porch is a stone bowl which may have served as a stoup and at another time as a domestic mortar. It has four equidistant projecting lugs or handles.

The Church was probably among the Dungleddy deanery churches granted to the abbey of St. Peter Gloucester by a knight named Wiz the Fleming about the year 1114 (Hist Cart Mon S Petri Glous.; Rolls Ed i 228, 262-6). A few years later these churches were transferred to the priory of Worcester and subsequently they are found attached to the Hospitallers of St. John at Slebech. Variants on the name are Amelostiston (1409) and Amlaston (1490) Visited 20 Apr 1920.

The grant of Ambleston by Wizo, his son, and grandson, to the Knights of St. John, mentioned above, comprised all the churches and Chapels in their fee of Dungledy, and among them were the Chapels of Rinaston and Woodstock , in the parish of Ambleston. The former is described as Cappella de Villa Reineri. Anselm's Confirm. charter. There is a Chapel of ease called Rinnaston, distant from the parish Church about a mile served by the Vicar. -Diocese Book of St David's for 1715.

The Church Plate of Pembrokeshire. Evans, John Thomas , Ambleston '—The vessel now used as a Chalice at Ambleston is a two-handled fluted cup . It was not originally designed for ecclesiastical purposes. It bears the Hall Mark of 1750, the maker's Mark being H B in plain oblong for Henry Brind. Weight, 9 oz. 13 dwts. It is prettily engraved with scroll work, and is inscribed " Ambleston T » T 1751." The initials are probably those of Admiral Thomas Tucker, concerning whom a descendant. Colonel F. Edwardess of Hook, Treffgarne, writes "In his younger days he served upon the ship that captured a notorious Pirate, known as "Blue Beard," and later, as Captain of a frigate, he captured the Spanish ship, Son Josef. I believe he held the rank of full Admiral, and was for a time in command of the Channel Squadron. He owned Sealyham and the Tucker Estates, and also built Hook, where he appears to have died." In the Church of St. Dogwells there is the following inscription: "Sacred to the Memory of Admiral T. Tucker of Hook, who died 5th of July, 1766." The monument was erected by Thomas Edwardess Tucker, 1837.

—The only other vessel is a pewter Plate, 11 in. in diam., and bearing the following marks: T C in a plain shield; a fleur de lys; a Griffin (?) rampant; There is a plate by the same maker at Penrieth.

The State of Education in Wales 1847

Parish of Ambleston

– This is an agricultural parish. Wages are for labourers 7d per day with, and 1s without food. The character of the people is steady. The landed proprietors are non-resident and contribute nothing to schools. There are four farmers in the parish paying above £100 a year rent. Their children are educated with those of labourers. The people can generally Read; but the means of education are insufficient, and there are said to be 50 children not attending a day school. There is no resident Clergyman signed John Pugh Vicar.

Mr Bowen's School – The schoolroom is a small apartment in the master's dwelling house. I saw in it one table, three benches, and a great many articles for domestic use. The master spoke English tolerably well, and is a schoolmaster of Long standing. His scholars are labourer's children, whose parents, he said are too poor to pay for their schooling. He sells groceries and appeared to live better than on the paltry sum he receives from his school. January 11th 1847 WM. Morris, Assistant.

Farming Pembrokeshire in Bygone Days Francis Green

The letting of a farm, with live stock and implements on 10 Feb., 1606-7, when Philip Picton of Martletwy, yeoman, leased to John Thomas, then late of Lawrenny, Husband-man, a messuage and lands in the fields of Scollock in the parish of Ambleston, together with 10 Kine, 4 oxen, 60 sheep, 2 horses, a mare, a cart bound with iron, a plough with iron, and two pairs of harrows with their teeth, for five years at the yearly rent of £13 6s. 8d.

The description of the plough and harrows suggests that both these implements largely consisted of wood.

Mining

Slags from ancient iron smelting reported. Possibly iron Mining in the area.

Places of interest

Reynerton (locally Rinaston) Chapel:

This was a small Chapel of ease to the parish Church which is now disused and become a ruin all that remains are the walls of a small chamber 30ft x 13 1/3 ft. There was a stone vaulted western porch 10ft x 9 1/2 ft probably with a room over. The walls of the building are from 3 to 4 ft high. A burial took place within the Church in 1789 a few years before its abandonment. The ruins stand within the yard of Rinaston Farm in the centre of an enclosure 120ft x100ft which is still known as "the graveyard". The walls of this enclosure have been cleared away so that the whole of the burial ground is without shelter or protection and trees grow freely upon and about the ruins. In a charter of 1230 the Chapel is described as "capella de Ville Reineri". Visited 13 Oct 1914

Reynaston: This tiny 13c Chapel in Ambleston Parish was abandoned c1800 and is now a ruin in a farmyard – there seems to have been a room over the vaulted west porch.

Rinaston

The Chapel of Rinaston was in ruins in 1904; only portions of the main walls then remained, and one of the walls was merely held together by the roots of a good-sized tree which had grown on the masonry. The Chapel was a small edifice, and was situated at the northern end of the farmyard of Rinaston Farm; it consisted of a nave and chancel. Within the nave is a tomb with an inscription to the memory of David Morse of Reynaston, who died on 30 July, 1785 aged 67, and his wife Martha, who died on 11 Jan., 1789 aged 64. From this it would appear that the Chapel was probably abandoned at the end of the 18th century.

Parc Castell Parc Carreg Greystone

Parc Greystone

Lower Greystone

The names of these sites suggest an historical origin and where an Archaeological discovery may at any time be made.

Wallis Rath: RCAM

This earthwork has a horse shoe appearance but it probably originated as an irregular square with considerably rounded corners. The northern bank has been cleared away The ground is fairly level both within the enclosure and around it. It has a diameter of about 80 ft. and the bank on the south side where it is seen at its best is from 3 to 4 ft. high with an exterior fall of about 5 ft to a shallow ditch. Within the enclosure are slight elevations as of foundations and the site may possibly have been that of a small moated dwelling. Immediately south of the earthwork is a farmhouse named Pen y Castell - Visited 13 Oct 1914.

Woodstock Ring: RCAM

At the junction of four roads a few yards east of Woodstock schoolhouse is an enclosure of about 60 ft in diameter which is possibly the site of a small moated dwelling though there are at present no indications of a moat. A surrounding bank stands about 3 ft high. In the same field are the ruins of a small Chapel and burial ground of Rinaston. The name "ring" is not common. Visited 13 Oct 1913.

Cromlechau at Parc y llyn: RCAM

About 300 yards SW of the farmhouse of Parc y llyn and 800 yards SSE of a spot in the adjoining parish of St. Dogwells where another cromlech is known to have stood are the remains of at least one and probably two cromlechs. A capstone 7 foot by 5 foot, appears to rest upon two supports; these are partly covered by accumulated soil, but show a height of at least 2 ft. The capstone is aligned North East -South west In the hedge to the east and largely concealed by it, is what may have been the capstone of another cromlech, but failing examination with a spade it is impossible to say more about it. Both remain standing upon a slightly elevated platform of 180 ft. circumference - Visited 13th Oct. 1914.

Chapel:

On a field at Woodstock called Parc Capel are the outlines (about 40ft x 20ft) of the foundations of a small building which may have been an early Chapel. So far as the ruins can be aligned the building seems to have stood directly East – west and a slight depression suggests the existence of a north door. The surrounding area is locally called "the Burial Ground" but nothing is known nor does any tradition exist of interments having been met with at any time. Immediately NE of the site and practically adjoining it is the earthwork known as Woodstock Ring - Visited 13 Oct 1914

Church Meadow: This is the name of a field on the farm of Scollock west about 1 mile SE of the parish Church. No tradition explains the name which indeed is not now in use. It may at an earlier time been part of the Glebe. Visited 13 Oct 1914

Scollock Cross:

Here the word "cross" merely marks the meeting and crossing of roads. Visited 13 Oct 1914.

Amroth,

Coal Mining

The parish was an important Anthracite coal mining area until the end of the 19th century. Slight remains of mines and tramways are still found

Amroth

Amroth is now a holiday village, 7 miles (11km) east of Tenby Pembrokeshire noted for its long sandy beach

The name is Welsh, and probably means "On (the brook called) Rhath".

The beach stretches the whole length of the village. At extreme low tide you can still see the petrified forest, destroyed when sea levels rose 7000 years ago, while fossilise antlers, nuts, animal bones and Neolithic flints have been discovered. Ruins of Hean Castle still remain, and one mile inland is the Parish Church.

Whatever may have been the relative importance of the Church of Amroth during the early Welsh period and we have reason to believe that this was without question – it makes no appearance in the Taxation of 1291. Tenby, Gumfreston and Begelly are entered, all of them having been carved out of an earlier Amroth as a result of the Norse settlement with (it may be) the addition of Carew; and it is possible that at this time the residue of Amroth was merged in the rising Scandinavian seaport of Tenby. It is also not named in the St Davids Survey of 1326. RCAM

Amroth was a landing place for Pilgrims heading and returning from St David's (Two pilgrimages to St David's equalled on to Rome). From Amroth they could take a boat to Cardiff or Bristol thus avoiding the danger of robbers and the very bad muddy roads. It was quicker and less tiring than walking as well although there was always the problem of sea sickness.

According to Prof. J Roger Rees writing in Arch Camb 1897 on the subject of Slebech Commandery and the Knights of St John. The order was established by Papal Bull in 1113 and very soon after gifts of land and churches were being made to the Order and these gifts increased along the route taken by Giraldus Cambrensis and Archbishop Baldwin in 1118. Most of the gifts were given so that the health of the donor's soul, his ancestors and his successors might be assured. If he decided to join a religious order he undertook to join the Hospitallers and in any case his body on death should be buried by the Brethren.

William Herizon who held Amroth; evidently held under William of Narberth, the tenant in chief of the King, one knights fee of five hides (approximately five hundred acres) in exchange for services due to his superior Lord. William Herizon wanted to donate to the Hospitallers half his holding which necessitated the permission of William of Narberth. This was given and

Acc/ to Anselm's Confirmation

William Herizon gave the Hospitallers:-

The Church of Amtrud (Amroth) with

Fifty acres of Sanctuary Land (A sacred place, in which fugitives formerly were immune to arrest (recognized by English law from the fourth to the seventeenth century) and

Two Plough-lands (approx 200 acres) With all their appurtenances and liberties.

Which they seem to have retained until the Reformation

Amroath (Ambroth, or Amroth)

Amroath (AMBROTH, or Amroth), a parish, in the union and hundred of Narberth, county of Pembroke, South Wales, 7 miles (S. E.) from Narberth; containing 779 inhabitants. This parish is situated on the western shore of Carmarthen bay. It abounds with coal of a peculiarly fine quality, which, burning without smoke or any offensive smell, is much in request for drying malt and hops; for this purpose, considerable quantities are shipped from a place called Wiseman's Bridge, in vessels of fifty or sixty tons' burden, for Bristol, and other places on the banks of the Severn. This part of the bay is celebrated for Salmon, Cod, and flat-fish, which are taken in abundance, for the supply of the Market at Tenby, five miles distant.

Iron-ore was obtained in the parish, during the existence of the Penbrey Iron Company; but the operations have been suspended since the stoppage of their works. The living is a discharged vicarage, rated in the King's Books at £3. 18. 6½., and endowed with £600 royal bounty and £600 parliamentary grant; net income, £112; patron and impropriator, Charles Poyer Callen, esq.. The Church, dedicated to St. Elidyr, is an ancient structure in the early style of English architecture, with a lofty square embattled tower, and is well fitted up.

A school, for the gratuitous instruction of an unlimited number of children of both sexes, was endowed in 1789 by D. Rees, esq., of the city of London, who gave £20 per annum to the parish, of which £5, according to the will of the testator, are distributed among the most deserving of the poor, and the remainder appropriated to the maintenance of the school, in which are at present about seventy five children. The endowment amounts to £666. 13. 4. three per cent. consols, vested in respectable trustees; the present school-room was erected by the parish, in 1832. A Sunday school, which is supported by subscription, is attended by about fifty children, nearly all of whom participate in the benefits of the day school.

In the vicinity of Amroath are several elegant seats, of which two are within the parish. Of these, Amroath Castle, originally either the residence of Cadwgan ab Bleddyn, Prince of Powys, or the site of his palace, and subsequently the seat of the family of Elliot, at which period it was called Eare Weare, has been modernised into a marine castellated mansion. It was at this place, according to some writers, that Cadwgan ab Bleddyn gave a sumptuous banquet to the neighbouring chiefs, among whom was Gerald de Windsor, Lord of Carew with his wife Nêst, whom the son of Cadwgan afterwards carried off by force from Carew Castle, as is noticed in the account of that place. Colby Lodge is situated in a highly romantic dell, opening at one extremity towards the sea; it commands a fine sea view, and is enriched in other parts with scenery pleasingly varied, forming a beautiful and sequestered retreat.

1846 23 Oct. Amroth Church Glynne

This is a curious Pembrokeshire Church consisting of a nave with a singular western vestibule, a tower forming a north transept, a south transept, and a chancel with north aisle. The tower is of the usual kind, embattled, with a block-cornice under it, and a square turret at the south-east. The belfry windows are narrow and rude. The exterior has a rude appearance, and is partly whitewashed. The vestibule, westward of the nave, is of lower elevation, and opens to it by a rude, plain, pointed arch without impost mouldings. The nave has a coved roof, plastered, and the arch opening from it to the south transept is of a plain. Pointed form. The tower contains a two-light window, of trefoil lights and square head, apparently Perpendicular. The chancel-arch is depressed, and rude in form, set upon imposts. On the south side of the chancel is a very flat arch in the wall, which seems to have once communicated with an aisle or Chapel. The chancel is divided from a north aisle by an odd-shaped, flattened arch; and there is a similar one between the tower and the nave, and between the north chancel-aisle and the tower. The north chancel-aisle is raised on an ascent of three steps, and forms the burying-place of the Biddulph family. In its wall is a pointed, arched recess, probably a piscina. The east window of the chancel, and also that of the north chancel-aisle, are Perpendicular.

The other windows are wretched modern insertions. The interior is damp, and vilely pewed. The font seems Norman, having a square bowl, with some, curious, sculptured foliage, upon a square stem and plinth.

In the churchyard is a cross. The tower has three bells.

This Church was put into good repair early in the incumbency of the present Vicar, the Rev. W. D. Phillips, who was instituted in 1850. Mr. Biddulph, whose wife and two children lie in the north chancel -aisle, owned Amroth Castle from 1832-40, and resided in it. The Castle, which, although much modernised, retains distinct traces of medieval features, had, centuries since, a considerable estate attached to it, possessed by the Barrets of Pendine, from whom it passed by marriage to a family of distinction named Elliot.

1915 RCAM The parish Church Amroth

(6 in. Ord. Surv. sheet, Pem. 85 N.E.) Ded: St. Elidyr.+Diocese and archdeaconry of St Davids; rural deanery of Narberth.

The parish Church of Amroth was rebuilt in 1855, according to an inscription on the Bell frame, or, more accurately stated, was enlarged, the nave being lengthened by 26 feet. It was also restored in 1899. It now consists of nave (58- feet by 322 feet), chancel (21 feet by 152 feet), north aisle to chancel, known as Amroth Castle Chapel (230 feet by 132 feet), south transept (17- feet by 184 feet), tower on north side (18 feet by 172 feet externally), and south porch. The ground chamber of the tower, south transept, and the eastern half of the nave have plain vaulting. The pointed chancel arch has replaced the "depressed and rude " arch seen by Sir Stephen Glynne in 1845. All the windows are modern with the exception of that in the ground floor of the tower, which is a two-light with trefoiled heads. In the south side of the older portion of the nave is a blocked off doorway having a pointed arch. The tower is of three storeys, the lowest opening to the nave; it has a projecting stair-turret rising to the battlements and lit by slits. The corbel table is massive and prominent. The font bowl, of the Casual Norman type, 22 inches square, and with slightly sloping sides, is decorated on each face with an unusual motive in relief which may be intended to represent a vine leaf and branch, repeated in reverse. In the south-east corner of the Chapel is a plain piscina. In the churchyard a fragment of the stem of a tall cross still stands upon its original base.—Visited, 19th May, 1915.

St Elidyr's Church, Amroth dates from the 13th century. A charter of 1231 indicates that the Church had been granted to the Knights Hospitallers of Slebech. The list of Vicars commences in 1332. The north Chapel was the private Chapel of Amroth Castle. In 1855 the Galilee porch was extended to provide additional nave seating. The words 'rebuilt 1855' are carved on the Bell-frame. In the restoration the tower, walls (apart from the west of the Galilee) and vaulted roofs were retained. The porch appears to have been added later, and was in place by 1888. In 1882 the Amroth Castle

Chapel was granted to the Church. Its window had not been included in the restoration but has since been rebuilt in Perpendicular style. The Chancel and are Chapel paved in black and white chequer tiles. A wide pointed arch leads from the Chancel into the Amroth Castle Chapel. This has a boarded barrel ceiling with ribs. The late Norman font is square and covered in sculptured foliage. It has a good modern carved cover in late Gothic style.

This Church was granted to the Knights of St. John of Jerusalem about the year 1150, by William Horrizon, by the permission of William de Narberth. the grant included the Church of 'Amtrud' [Amroth] with 50 acres of sanctuary land and two carucates of land.—Anselm's Confirm. charter. On 25 Jan., 1899, a faculty was granted for the restoration of the parish Church, and on 8 March, 1902, a faculty was granted for the removal of a cottage belonging to the benefice.

1847 The State of Education in Wales -Amroth

Parish of Amroth – Charity School – This school is held in a schoolroom erected at the Parish expense in the Churchyard in 1832. It is in good repair, except for the concrete floor, in which there are many and deep holes. The furniture consists of only one desk for the master, and one ten feet long for all the scholars, 10 benches and 2 cupboards in the corners of the schoolroom. In these latter the scholars keep their dinners. There are no maps of any kind, and the scholars provide their own books to the great disadvantage of the master, who was highly spoken of in the neighbourhood. He appeared to discharge his duties well, but nothing beyond reading, writing and arithmetic is taught. Of the 75 scholars, 18 of them are farmers' children; the remainder consist of labourers, colliers and mechanics children. Their education is entirely gratuitous except those who learn arithmetic, for which they pay £1 per annum. The school is endowed by the late David Rees gent of the city of London, a native of Amroth; the £15 is paid in half yearly instalments by Messrs Child, of London. The trustees are the Rev W D Phillips, Curate of Amroth and Messrs. John Rogers and William Phelps of the same parish. The Scholars are not compelled to learn the Church Catechism nor attend the Church.

The 14th chapter of St Luke was read and to questions proposed by the master they gave pretty correct answers (Proposed by Me) --Tenby is south from Amroth; Pembroke to the west; Llanelly to the east; Cardigan to the north. Victoria is our Queen; her consort is Prince Albert; never saw the Queen; saw her image "in the book"

The copybooks were kept clean, and some were fairly written.

Mr John Rogers, schoolmaster and Mr Thomas Protheroe, farmer informed me that labourers on their own finding get 7s a week and from 8d to 1s a day with food; farm servants £6 to £8 and female servants 30s to £3 a year; colliers, on average 9s a week.

Some of the smaller farmers are unable to write their names, and are quite illiterate. The most respectable can read and write well. There is a desire for education among all classes here

1923 Parish of Amroth RCAM

The district comprising the medieval deanery of Pembroke with possibly a parish or two of the immediately adjoining deaneries appears to have been the main field of activity of St Teilo's missionary labours within what became the county of Pembroke. The greater number churches in this area are dedicated to St Teilo of his disciples and followers. The concurrent crusade of St David and his followers, starting as it probably did from south Cardiganshire and eventually compassing the whole of north western Dyfed, was bound to result in trouble between the two bodies of zealous ecclesiastics, trouble which manifested itself for centuries after the formation of the bishoprics of St David and Llandaff under the titular headship of Dewi and Teilo respectively. The occasion and course of the dispute between the two sees is outside the scope of this volume, but the fact that it has a bearing upon the archaeology of the district, and may in its turn receive some much needed elucidation from the consideration of the historical and antiquarian evidence, is sufficient excuse for the following remarks.

The book of Llan Dav

Amongst the various documents contained in the collection known as The book of Llan Dav which were brought together in connection with the claim of Landaff to episcopal jurisdiction over all churches of Teilo's foundation, wherever situated are several lists of the churches thus claimed, the lists being unquestionably of earlier date than the collection within which they are preserved. The churches which fall into what may be termed the Teilo area of the later county of Pembroke are thus enumerated—

Lann rath.

Lann cronnguern cum tribus territoriis Amrath. Finis illarum o frut gurcant hit glan rath.

Tref carn villa tantum sine ecclesia.

Luin Teliau, villa tantum

Eccluis guiniau ubi natus est sanetus Teliau

Porth medgen, villa tantum.

Din guennhaf in Lonion villa tantum.

The first name, Llan rath, when taken with the particulars given in the next entry Amrath and hit elan rath. maybe safely regarded as representing the modern Amroth, much as by a diametrically opposite linguistic turn the Lonion of the document has become the modern Lanion near Pembroke. The rath at Amroth is doubtless the mound, of which only faint traces exist, placed near the Church and on ground called in the Tithe Schedule " Castle park " (see No. 13)- The tribes terntsriis Amrath are more particularly set forth in the original charters which is also contained in the Book of Llan Dav (p. 125)- Here Aircol lauhir fil to Tryfun rege Demetice regionis grants to St. Teilo the three villis Trefearn. Finis o uinyd garthon di blain nant Brat yr guaiet hit in Ritec.

Ex alia parte o uinyd garthon hit nant y clavorion bet (hit) in Ritec; Laith ty Teliau, o earn baclan di ail meiniauc bet (hit) in Ritec;

Menechi, o tref eithinauc di nant hirotguidou bet in Ritec. Ex alia parte o tonou (?) pencenn (pencefn) di blain nant castellt cerran bet (hit) in Ritee-

It will be noticed that the three villis are described in the charter as each extending hit in Ritec, that is as far as (or to) the Ritec; and in the list of churches

Laith ty Teilo is said to be super ripam Ritec junta Pen Alun, whilst

Menechi is given as ar glan Ritec junta Pen Alun.

The Ritec is the stream that falls into the sea at Tenby after a straight easterly course of about six miles from its source in the long ridge of open down extending from directly above Tenby- to within half a mile of Pembroke. along the summit of this open land runs a track known as the Ridgeway, the trackway being bordered by many monuments of antiquity. The course of the little stream is on the north side of the upland, but by a sharp bend round the corner of the ridge it reaches the sea a little to the south of the Ridgeway. Traced from its mouth, it is first found to form a boundary between the parishes of Tenby (St. Mary in Liberty) and Penally, next between Gumfreston and Penally, then between Penally and St. Florence, finally disappearing within the last-named parish at a point nearly a mile beyond its parish Church.

The first-named of the vills in the district round about (Am)Rath, Tref Carn, would appear to have been situated in the north-eastern corner of the parish of St. Florence, where on the boundary line between St. Florence and Gumfreston parishes is an outcrop of rock called Carn Rock, and adjacent to it the Tithe Schedule of St Florence locates two Carn Meadows. The trev or township probably extended from the borders of the parish to the Ritec, a distance of a little over a mile.

The name of the second vill is Llaethdy Teilo. Taken literally, this means Teilo's dairy, but seeing that Teilo, like his rival David, was probably the son of a Welsh chieftain, or, at lowest, of a Welsh free tribesman, and would accordingly be reared by foster-parents, the words may signify the trev of Teilo's fosterage. It is described as being upon the banks of Ritec, where , a few yards directly north of Carswell Farm, is a spot called in the Tithe Schedule of Gumfreston " The Palace," which term is possibly intended to represent the Welsh Llys, and to denote a habitation of dignity and repute.

Furthermore, a short mile to the south of the site just indicated, and on the slopes of the Ridgeway, the Tithe Schedule gives the name " Castle Gwyne " to the field immediately behind the faint remains of the ancient manor house of Trefloyne. Now, the old list of Teilo foundations mentions one of them as Eccluis guiniau, " where St. Teilo was born." There is now no trace of either eglwys " or " Castle," but there can be little doubt that we are here in the immediate neighbourhood of Teilo's birthplace and upbringing, and possibly upon the scene of his earliest labours.

Menechi (Monks' town), the third vill, extended from Tref eithinog (gorse vill) to the streamlet of Nant y rhodwyddeu, thence to the Ritec; in other directions is from Tonou Pencenn (Read Pen ceun, the top of the ridge), to (or towards) Nant Castell Cerran, thence to the Ritec. - ;

Thus the three trevs had a common boundary in the brook Ritec, and were probably three patrimonies lying on the south or perhaps both sides of the stream, and, taking Amroth as having been in the Welsh Church period a district of considerable importance and area, it would appear that the first-named of the trevs was situated to the north of the Ritec stream with its dependence upon the little seaport of Amroth; Llaethdy Teilo formed the southern part, with Penally as its natural point of concentration; and (Tref y) Myneich (Monks tun) came between them.

Longstone RCAM

This well-known monolith stands in a field to which it has given its name on the farm of King's Park Honse. It has a height of 6 feet from the ground level, and a breadth at the base of 3 5 feet, declining to about one half at the top, and a depth of 13 inches. There are no traditions connected with the stone. Tithe Schedule, Ns. 380.—Visited, 25th April, 1915.

Amroth Castle RCAM

On the field called " Castle Park " which adjoins the churchyard of the parish, is a small mound traditionally believed to be the site of Earwere (later Amroth) Castle. At a subsequent period it should appear that the mound gave a place to a small stone Castle on a site about 500 yards to the south-east of the mound, of which practically nothing now remains beyond a much-restored gateway that may date from the early 14th century. This dwelling probably developed into a residence " of the castellated style of architecture " (Fenton, Tours); and in the last century this in turn gave way to the present modern dwelling.).—Visited, ;19th May, 1915 RCAM

Greystone Park

There is no appearance or tradition of a " grey stone " on this site, and the field name is probably compounded of Gray's or Grey's-tun.

Church Park

Probably in former times a part of the parochial glebe. Tithe Schedule, —Visited, 23rd April, Neolithic Flints.

The parish of Amroth has as its southern boundary the Bristol Channel, and along a considerable stretch of the shore the sea has been encroaching upon the land for untold ages. At very low tides the remains of a submerged forest are visible. Bones of comparatively recent animals, wild ox and stag and flint objects in various stages of development and stages of workmanship have been found-- They are all of the Neolithic period.

Roman Remains Acc to RCAHMW

Traces of a Roman villa excavated within an earthwork enclosure.

A subcircular earthwork enclosure, 72-76m in diameter, defined by a rampart, ditch & counterscarp, having a south-west facing entrance, from which the ground falls away in all directions, steeply on the east, save the north, where it faces gently rising ground: identified from RAF vertical AP in 1948, & trenched as a possibly medieval site in 1950, the recognition of Roman material prompting further excavation of internal surface features, 1950-1: this work recorded a heavily plough-damaged rectangular stone built, or founded building, at least 17.5m north-west to south-east by 7.0-8.5m, divided into three compartments by stone-founded partition walls; patches of clay floor were recorded, as well as stone-flags & pitching, these last possibly floor substructures; finds indicated occupation from the early 2nd to at least the later third century; flue-tile fragments suggest the presence of a hypocaust, or bath-suite; fragments of ceramic roof tile were also noted: indications of further structures were noted close by the main building, or range, which was positioned to face the enclosure entrance.

2. Aerial reconnaissance in 2007 revealed rectangular footings of a possible building 440m NNW of Trelissey villa at Eastlake. These may be interpreted as those of a possible Roman building but further work is required.

Low earthworks of a sharp-edged rectangular building platform measuring c.35m x 18m were recorded during RCAHMW aerial reconnaissance on 29th November 2007 . The building platform is associated with a linear ditch or leat on the north side, and an angled ditch on the west, both perhaps forming boundaries or parts of a water management system. The site occupies the upper slopes of a west-facing valley, looking down to the present Eastlake farm and a minor stream which issues to the sea at Amroth to the south. There is no way to date the earthworks of the building platform. However, the site lies just 440m NNW of the excavated Trelissey Roman villa (NPRN 304230), and the rectangular form and dimensions of this present site would match those of a Roman villa quite closely. The earthworks could however relate to a much more recent structure, although the field is shown as open pasture on 19th century County Series mapping.

Colby Lodge House

John Colby, a local mine owner, built Colby Lodge, Amroth, in 1803. Alterations are believed to have been carried out in 1825.

The house is a plain 3 storey building with a slate roof. There is a flat porch with 4 square columns and a lower 3 storey rear wing. It is rendered and painted, with scored lines to imitate stone courses. The roof is of low pitch with tile ridges and hips.

Improvements to the house were carried out in the late 1960s. The house, gardens and estate were later taken into National Trust ownership, and the house, with its immediate gardens and the walled garden, granted on long lease to the present owners.

Nonconformist Chapels:

Zoar Baptist Chapel was built in 1854 and a porch added in 1935. The present Chapel, dated 1854, is built in the Simple Gothic style with a long-wall entry plan. Zoar is now Grade 2 Listed as a simple country Chapel with an austere design and original layout.

Ebenezer Congregational Chapel was built in 1867 and possibly rebuilt 1887. The present Chapel, dated 1887, is built in the Simple round-Headed style with a gable-entry plan. Was still open in 1993

LLanteague Congregational Chapel was built in 1854 and rebuilt in 1889. The later Chapel was built in the Vernacular style with a gable-entry plan.

Summerhill Methodist Chapel was built in 1881 in the Simple Gothic style with a gable-entry plan. By 1993 this Chapel had been converted into a house.

Elim Congregational Chapel was built in 1850 and rebuilt during the late nineteenth century. The later Chapel is built in the Vernacular style with a gable-entry plan and segmentally headed openings. By 1993 this Chapel was in use as the Sunday school to Sardis.

Stepaside Methodist Chapel was built in 1861 and a large extension added at ninety degrees in 1893. The 1861 Chapel was built in the Simple round-Headed style with a long-wall entry plan.

Williams Thomas 1741 Apr 18 Vicar Amroth Church Pembrokeshire Parsons.
Phillips Peregrine 1640's Acc/to J T Rees " History of Protestant Nonconformity in Wales" (1861)

The Oxford-educated Phillips, the son of a vicar of Amroth, was appointed to the Llangwm living after briefly serving as his uncles curate at Kidwelly. Pluralism was very common, and with the backing of such gentlemen as Sir Hugh Owen, Sir Roger Lort and Sir John Meyrick, he was soon preferred first to Monkton and then to Pembroke St Mary's. When he preached before Oliver Cromwell and his troops during the siege of Pembroke (1648) he so impressed the future Protector that he was invited aboard the men- of-war about to undertake the Irish campaign. During the Protectorate, Phillips became widely known as a committed advocate of the governments religious policy. A very accomplished orator, hailed by many as the best in the county, he preached in almost every Church English and Welsh, and before the Justices of the Assizes at Cardigan, Haverfordwest and Carmarthen. He must have relinquished his Pembroke incumbency when the parishes of Llangwn, Freystrop and Rosemarket were united (July 1656). On one occasion, the intrepid rector had an experience which convinced many of his admirers that Providence had a special affection for him. When riding homeward late at night, both he and his horse plunged into a deep coal-pit at Freysrop and were firmly wedged in the narrow mouth a few feet from the surface. He was rescued by the proprietor Captain Longmans, who had been appraised of his perilous predicament by an un-named deaf woman and her alert grandson.. Peregrine Phillips continued to be very active as an open-air preacher and public evangelist until soon after the restoration he fell foul of the Act of Uniformity (1662) which banned all acts of worship not conducted in accordance with the Book of Common Prayer. Ejected from the Established Church, this amiable but unrepentant non-conformist withdrew to Dredgeman Hill Farm which he held from Sir Herbert Perrot, of Haroldston, and which he converted into an Independent house Church (1665). Thereafter he became the accredited pastor of the Green Meeting, a non-conformist group of 50/60 which assembled in a little room on St Thomas 's Green and which was to develop into Albany Congregation (now United Reformed) Church Haverfordwest. Upon his death at 68 years of age in September 1692, this unforgettable former rector of Llangwm was buried near the pulpit at Haroldston Church.

Angle (Nangle) (see also Bangeston)

A single street village near sea level at western end of the Castlemartin peninsular. There is evidence of pre Norman strip fields still existing behind each freehold as they have since approx. 800 AD village. Flat topped houses and colonnaded Globe Hotel reflected, it is alleged the participation of Colonel Richard Myerhouse in the South African Wars. The last remains of five old sailing vessels are slowly rotting away on the beach one of which was the schooner Progress reputedly the fastest ship in her day on the Cod run to Newfoundland another the 45ft two masted ketch Mary Jane the last ship to be built in Jacob's Pill.

First records using the name date from 12 century and it was sometimes recorded as Nangle.

Earthworks and Monuments according to the RCAM

The Devil's Quoit, or Newton Cromlech:

This structure stands on the stretch of sand known as Newton or Broom Burrows; at high tides the sea reaches the stones. One, possibly two, of the supporters has fallen so that the fine capstone, 12 feet in length, is borne one end by a single stone. Fenton (Tour, 405) speaks of the structure as having probably been covered, but there is now no trace of a possible mound. About forty paces to the East is a prostrate monolith which may have had some connection with the cromlech.

Castles Bay or Skomer Neck Camp:

(6 in. Ord. Surv. sheet, Pem. 38 SE. lat. 51° 40' 22" N, Long 5° 07' 00" W)

What must have been an unusually interesting earthwork has in recent years been much disturbed through various causes, military, agricultural and natural. Fortunately it was examined at the end of the 19th century by Lieut. Colonel W. Ll. Morgan, RE., an ex-Commissioner, who has written of it:

A bank and ditch, 200 feet long from cliff to cliff, cuts off an area of about half an acre from the mainland opposite to Sheep Island. The width from cliff to cliff is afterwards reduced to 100 feet and a deep natural gully, 60 feet wide, cuts off the rest of the promontory, about two acres in extent (defended by steep cliffs) from the first-named area. The smaller area might either have been the Bailey of the larger enclosure, or possibly the gully was used as a ditch to protect it from the sea. Probably the first is the correct solution, as Fenton (Tour, 404), quoting from George Owen's (1602) that the remnant of a tower stood in this further enclosure in the time of Queen Elizabeth, and that the tradition is that this was a place of retreat for the new Norman settlers to save themselves from the natives. The rampart mentioned above is 6 feet high (or rather was, for it has mostly been destroyed by the erection of a War Office building) across the tongue, with 8 feet fall to a ditch 5 feet wide, the ground rising to the front. The entrance is near the east end.

The surface of the larger area or promontory is dotted with depressions, which, in the absence of spade examination, have every appearance of hut circles. Some of these might profitably be excavated.

West Pickard Camp:

(This name does not appear on any map or document till the 1842 tithe assessments). (6 in. Ord. Surv. sheet, Pem. 38 SE.; lat. 51° 40' 00" N, long. 5° 05' 20" W).

This promontory camp is situated midway between west and East Pickard Bays. Although much damaged from exposure enough remains to show it to have been of horse-shoe shape, and to have measured 220 feet by 160 feet. To the west the defence is formed by the naturally steep cliffs; to the north and east a bank rises some 8 feet from the enclosed area, falling externally 15 feet to a ditch of an average depth of 3 feet. The entrance was at the south-east Angle. Any footpath which may have led down to the sea has disappeared through falls of the cliff. Visited, 8th June, 1922.

Castle:

(6 in. Ord. Surv. sheet, Pem. 38 NE.; lat. 51° 04' 5" N, long. 5° 05' 16" W).

Separated at high tide from the Church and churchyard are the remains of a moated dwelling which has been frequently termed a "Fortified Rectory" upon part of the ruins a Small house has been built which is called "Castle Farm," (first recorded in 1729) and by this name the site is locally known.

On plan the site gives a square enclosure, protected on its north and west sides by a well-preserved wet moat, on the south by an inlet of the sea, and on the east originally by the third side of the moat, which, however, has been here filled-in to form a road At the south-west corner stands the shell of a tower of the "Peel" type 15 feet square, and some 80 feet high. This is the part of the structure which is illustrated and described in Arch. Camb. (1868, ITI, xiv, 77) as a "Fortified Rectory."

The north-east angle was protected by another and possibly similar tower, of which the vaulted under-croft still survives in use as a cart shed. The south-west tower is of four stories, the lowest vaulted; all the floors have fallen, as has also the saddle-back roof. The first floor was reached by a flight of forty-seven steps.

The three upper storeys have fireplaces, that in the middle chamber being placed across an angle. In the ground floor chamber is an opening, probably intended provide access to the cellar beneath; in the wall outside are corbels which may have carried a hoisting arrangement; all of which point to smuggling activities at possibly a late date. A prominent feature on the four sides of the exterior is a Row of large corbels which possible supported a wooden galleys entered by a doorway still traceable at the head of the stair. The moat is stone-faced and in good preservation, the water being supplied by a small stream.

Immediately adjoining the filled-in side of the moat are the remains of an outbuilding with oven and circular chimney on square base, probably an addition, when about the end of the 17th century an inn called the "Castle Inn" occupied the enclosure. Over the entrance to this ruined dwelling is a stone bearing a human face in high relief. This is known locally as the Gerald stone (Gerald de Barri Giraldus Cambrensis, vicar of Angle c. AD 1200). The stone is probably the terminal of a Hood-moulding from an earlier house on the site.

A Jacobean glass bottle found in the moat is preserved in the Museum of Carmarthenshire Antiquarian Society.

In the adjoining field is a fine columbarium, with domed roof and several rows of Nest holes. Visited, 8th June, 1922.

East block-house:

On the cliff overlooking Rat Island, about three-quarters of a mile west North

Studdock farm-house, are the poor ruins of a block House which, according to George Owen, was erected temp. Henry VIII. The term East distinguish it from a somewhat similar building (now destroyed) which was known as the west block House, in Dale parish. It is described in the Pem.

Arch. Survey (p. 88) "24 feet from north to south by 13 feet from east to west. It was divided into two unequal chambers, each lighted by two windows looking east and west. The walls seem originally to have been about 15 feet high, but much has fallen, some recently. There seems to have been an enclosure on the north side, and a second building little distance off to the south-east, which was 22 feet by 9." Since this report the remains have deteriorated considerably. - Visited 8th June 1922

Ruined Almshouse:

To the immediate south of houses in the village of Angle, are the remains of a building marked "Castle" on the 6 in. Ordnance survey sheet. Of this once massive structure all now standing are three sides of a square walled enclosure heavily overgrown with ivy. It seems but little changed since the year 1868, when it was described and illustrated in Archaeologia Cambrensis (III, xiv, 76). It appears to have been a building, 90 feet by 13 feet, of two storeys in height. The west side, containing the entrance, has disappeared. The upper floor was lighted by two or three large windows; a fireplace and a cupboard with stone shelf by its side can also be traced. In the absence of clear indications the building may be put down as of late 15th or early 16th century date. Visited, 8th June, 1992

NOTE. The building goes by various names. Fenton (Tour, 402) quotes a letter from Canon Lewis of St Davids to Browne Willis, dated 12th January, 1719: "There is at Angle yet standing entire, an old square building said to have been a nunnery." Of a nunnery at Angle, however history is silent, nor do the remains point to such an establishment. "The Old Rectory" is another name locally used, in common with that given to the building on the north of the Church. Whatever its original purpose, there can be little doubt that it is the building thus alluded to in the MS. Diocese Book of 1715, preserved in the Diocesan Registry, Carmarthen - "There is . . . a ruined almshouse at Angle and £30 left by the will of Griffith Dawes, esq., of Barneston [Bangeston] near 40 years since, but no part thereof is yet paid by his administrators towards the repair thereof."

Angle The Parish Church Ded.: St. Mary.

The Church consists of nave (50 feet by 20 feet), chancel (30 feet by 14 feet), north transept (192 feet by 13 feet), west tower (19 feet by 16 feet) and a modern south porch. The tower opens to the nave by a pointed arch, it is of three storeys with a pointed barrel vault to the lowest and a domed roof to the belfry, the stones being further covered with tiles, a not uncommon feature of the Church towers of South Pembrokeshire. The apex of this tiled dome is on a level with battlements, which, with the usual corbel table, crown the tower. In the south-west angle is a projecting turret with seventy-six stairs. A doorway to the west is blocked; above it is a modern window. The belfry has two square-headed lights. The font of the Norman cushion type has been scraped and coloured. The nave north wall and the north transept are probably 13C, and the font is Norman. The 15C tower has a vaulted lowest stage and a dome roofed belfry. The nave south wall, the porch, chancel, and north Chapel are all Victorian.

The Church was heavily restored in 1853 by R. K. Penson but no actual account of the work done could be found.

Pembrokeshire Parsons

This benefice was formerly a rectory as well as a vicarage. The rectory was vested in the Priory of Pembroke, which was a cell to the Benedictine Abbey of St. Martin at Seyes in Normandy. In consequence of this, Pembroke Priory, during the wars between England and France, was constantly being seized by the King of England. Prior to 1461 the priory was taken into the King's hands, who granted it on 22 Dec., 1461, to the Abbey of St. Albans. Pat. Rolls.

The Church of Angulo was assessed in 1291 at £8, the tenths payable to the King being 16s. - Taxatio.

There is a ruined Chapel in which no divine service is performed, called St. Mary's, within half a mile of the parish Church; a ruined almshouse and £30 left by the will of Griffith Dawes esq. of Barneston [Bangeston] near 40 years since, but no part thereof is yet paid by his administrators towards the repair thereof. Diocese Book for 1715. The site of this Chapel is at Chapel Bay.

On 10 September., 1853, the parish schoolroom of Angle was licensed for divine service during the restoration of the Church.

On 5 Aug. 1886, the vicarage of Angle was merged in the rectory by an Order in Council, whereby the sinecure Rectory was suppressed as from 10 April, 1885.

Browne Willis in his list of churches (see Paroc wall.) mentions a chantry dedicated to St. George as being dependent on Angle Church. This chantry is very probably the neat little building, described by Fenton as being in the north east corner of the cemetery at Angle, and built over a vault.

Rev. Thomas Dalton (who was also vicar of Warren and Castlemartin) records that Average congregations: (12 months): morn. 100 to 160 + 42 to 45 scholars; aft. 100 to 160 + 42 to 45 scholars.

Remarks: The Parish of Angle comprises a Sinecure Rectory with a Good Glebe House & Garden, with three fourths of the tithes (Agricultural) leaving the Resident Vicar or Incumbent one fourth with 3 acres of Glebe. No habitable House of Residence without paying a high rent to the Proprietor and the performance of the whole duties of the Parish. The Population consists chiefly of Fishermen with their families including farm labourer's families employed by the Farmers in the neighbourhood or otherwise: Thomas Dalton. Vicar.

Sinecure rectory and discharged vicarage; rectory rated at £10.. 10, of net annual value of £157 with glebe of 20 acres and a glebe-house; vicarage rated at £3 19s 2d, endowed with £600 royal bounty, of gross annual value of £80: patron, Bishop of St Davids: one fourth of the tithes appropriated to the vicarage, and the remainder to the rectory.

1 service in English.

Incumbent: legally not resident. There are no non-conformist Chapels; but according to the 1851 census of Religious buildings

Thomas Harris of Milford states

I am a Baptist Home Missionary having not, as yet any Chapel erected, therefore do preach in a cottage and in the open air. We have no Sabbath School for the want of a place to keep it in. I preach in Castlemartin hundred in ten or eleven different places week nights included - the average congregation: mornings 40 - 50, evenings 50 - 70.

Chapel:

In the burial ground north of the Church is a small detached Chapel (15 feet by 12 feet), beneath which is a chamber, probably an ossuary; both have plain vaults. The Chapel, a little fisherman's Chapel built in 1447 is entered by a western doorway with a plain pointed arch, and approached by steps, has at the east end a square-headed window of two trefoiled lights, and on the south a similar light. The stone altar is said (Arch. Camb., 1880, IV, xi, 842) to have come from St. Twinnell's Church. In the south wall is a plain piscina. At the west end of the north wall is an empty tomb recession, the floor opposite to it is a much-worn full length uninscribed effigy of an ecclesiastic, probably the one noted by Fenton (Tour, 401) as being then "in the churchyard almost covered with the shard". The undercroft has a plain vault entered from the east end by a pointed doorway, and is lighted by two small quatrefoils on the north and south sides. On the south side of the churchyard is a plain cross standing upon a calvary of three steps; it has been restored.

Angle: St Mary Parish of Castlemartin "The Church has small fisherman's Chapel above a crypt and with small stained glass window showing Christ walking on the waters."

"Standing in the Corner of Angle churchyard there is a little Chapel 15 x12 , now known as "the Fisherman's Chapel". Dedicated originally to St. Anthony it replaced s a small single chamber over a vault built in 1447 by Edward de Shirburn. A tomb recess lies empty on one side, and a priest's effigy on the other. It was built by the Shirburn family as a chantry [a Chapel where mass could be said for the departed]. Its vaulted undercroft was intended as an ossuary [a repository for bones].

[A similar Chapel stands in the churchyard at Carew and there are traces of others in the area. They make an interesting link with Northern Brittany s Parish Closes].

Chapel of St George the Martyr

By the 16th century the Chapel at Angle was known as the Chapel of St. George the Martyr. A will of about 1500 transfer's endowments which had belonged to the Chapel of St Anthony, then recently washed away from the shore of West Angle Bay, to this Chapel (seats 14).

St Mary's Chapel and Well:

On the northern shore of the parish, at a point about half a mile north of the village of Angle, are sites called on the Ordnance sheets Chapel and Chapel Well, where stood a ruined Chapel in which no divine service is performed, called St. Mary's within half a mile of the parish Church" (MS. Diocesan Book 1715). No trace of the building remains. It stood within a small circular enclosure formed by a bank which at the beginning of this century was about 2 feet high (Pem. Arch. Survey). This is now barely distinguishable, nor are there any signs of burials. The well has been covered and a pump introduced. It would appear that there was a road or track to this site as there are records dated 1595 and 1596 referring to St Mary s well road.

St. Anthony's Chapel West Angle Bay:

On the shore of West Angle Bay about one mile west of Angle village is site called in the Tithe Schedule (No. 14) Old Church. This would appear to have been destroyed before the year 1500. In a field on the west side of Pill Bay can still be traced the site of a Church. The field is called Church Meadow and coffins and bones were said to have been found there. In 1997 parts of a skeleton were revealed by a landslip and two boys were found to be using a skull as a football on the beach. Remains were removed to a museum.

Ellen's Well:

This is marked on the Ordnance sheet as being on the cliffs half a mile east of Chapel Bay It could not be traced, nor any information obtained about it.

Globe Hotel:

is first mentioned in records in 1871 when it was kept by George and Maria Griffiths. The present Georgian style Globe Hotel was converted from two houses in 1904 used as a military convalescent hospital in WW1 and in WW2 military personnel were billeted there.

Historic Events and Records.

1170 April Henry II sailed from "The Nangle" on his expedition against Ireland with "Strongbow" 3 Ships [some date it Oct. 18 1172]

Gilbert de Angulo joined in the Pembrokeshire conquest of Ireland under Henry II., and was granted lands in Meath (hence the Nangles of west Meath to this day); he lost them by rebellion, was pardoned in 1307, and granted lands in Connaught, where his descendants took the name of MacHostilo, now Costello.

1171. "Among the Norman French Knights of Pembrokeshire who took part in the descent upon Ireland was a Nangle or Angul. The family established itself near Navan in the county of Meath and founded a Church at a place called Cannistown or Canonstown. One branch of these Irish "Angles" became known as "Costellos". (RCAM County of Pembroke).

1173 - 6. Gilbert and Jocelyn of Angle rewarded for their service in Ireland with estates in Meath, Ireland Gilbert with what later became known as the Barony of Morgallion, Jocelyn with Ardhronan and Naven.

Gerald de Barri, seeing that almost Throughout the diocese of St Davids and especially in the region of Demetia and Keretia, by the lack of care of the prelates, neither tithes of wool nor cheese were given, went to Canterbury to which at that time, the Church of St Davids, like the whole of Wales, was subject to provincial law, and showed these defaults to Archbishop Richard, then primate of all England and legate, who sent him back to Wales as his legate, to amend these irregularities and others, which he should find there. The archbishop in his letters warned and enjoined all for the remission of sins, that those who had not formerly given these tithes, should give them. To those who were willing to give at his monition, he relaxed a third part of the penance enjoined, but the obstinate and those who refused to give, he ordered should be coerced strictly by ecclesiastical censure. All the Welsh forthwith obeyed these monitions and agreed to give those tithes, as did all others in the whole country, except the Flemings of Ros, and their accomplices, who would have been put under interdict for a long period, had not the sentence imposed been relaxed by the archbishop at the instance of Henry II to whom they went.

William Karquit, sheriff of the province (provincia) ordered his officers and apparitors to take eight yoke of oxen belonging to the priory of Penbroc, where Gerald de Barri was fulfilling his legation, and drive them to the Castle. When required for the third time to restore the same, he utterly refused and even promised worse, Gerald sent word to him that unless he restored the oxen he would be placed immediately under sentence of excommunication, to which he replied that he would not dare to excommunicate the King's constable in his own Castle. Gerald replied that when the sheriff heard all the bells of the whole Monastery rung at triple intervals then he would know without doubt that he was being excommunicated.

Immediately the messengers had returned, by authority of his legation, with candles lit, he solemnly gave the sentence of excommunication on him, in the presence of the monks of that place, and many of the Clergy of the country, and likewise caused all the bells to be sounded together, as was customary, to confirm the sentence or rather to announce the fact. On the morrow, the robber came to the Castle of Lanwadein, before David, the diocesan Bishop, and Gerald and his colleague, Master Michael, whom the archbishop had attached to him, who had gone there, restitution having been made and satisfaction given, when he was beaten with rods, he was to be absolved.

1175 - 6 not dated. The inhabitants of the cantref of Dugledu and those of Angle were recalled under the sentence of interdict. The latter, though dwelling in the province (provincia) of Penbroc, were Flemings, and like those of Ros and Dugledu had spent money to obtain the immunity, which they likewise wished to enjoy.

1175 - 6 not dated. The parishioners of Angle, which was a Church of Gerald, archdeacon of Brecon, and which was under interdict, and its parishioners excommunicated on account of their rebellion, sought the Grace of absolution, with the leave and blessing of David the Bishop of St David, with whom he was staying at Kerr, Gerald set out to grant it.

(Ge. Camb. De Rebus (R.S) Vol. 1 p29).

1215. Irish grants to a Walter and Phillip de Angulo the grant to the latter being confirmed in 1232.

1247. Richard de Angulo held of the earl a knight s fee at Angle;

1278. Stephen, and Philip de Angulo granted various lands and demesnes in and about Angle, together with wreck of the sea, to Robert de Shirburn, with remainder in default of male issue to his daughter Joan, wife of Robert de Castro. The Golden Grove book (Page 336) gives Philip de Angulo as marrying daughter and heir of Stephen de Angulo, and their daughter Isabel as marrying Robert Shirburn, the son of John Shirburn.

John de Shirburn was Sheriff of Pembrokeshire. He possibly came here with Earl William de Valance, as the home of the Burnish was in Lancashire. Robert, his son, was Sheriff in 1298, as we see in Philip de Angulo's charter; the next was Walter, who was a Juror at Pembroke in 1327 and 1331; after him came his son Nicholas, who received in 1340 from Lawrence Hastings, then Earl of Pembroke, a general pardon for offences committed, probably during the Earl s long minority. Nicholas died in 1350 (his wife s name was Margaret). His son John was a Juror at Pembroke in 1357, and did service to Sir William de Carew; he died in 1362, leaving a daughter, Alice, ten years old.

1290 6th November. John de Scyrebur who witnessed the confirmation of a charter by which Fishguard was given to the monks of St. Dogmaels - had a son Robert who was Sheriff of Pembroke in 1298.

1298. This was the same Philip de Angulo who granted that other charter to William de Rupe or Roch, which was found by Dr. Scott in the British Museum, and of which the following is a translation:-

British Museum Stone charter, XXXII. 14.

Know all, present and future, that I, Philip de Angulo, has given, granted, and by this my present charter confirmed to William de Rupe (Roch) all my land which I have in the tenement of Angle, with appurtenances, together with the dowry of my mother, Isabel, when it shall occur, and a certain Island called Sepinilond (Sheep Island) and all my rents of Angle, as well of a windmill as of all my men, with suit of Court and services of the same, without any retention there from to me or my heirs.

To have and to hold the aforesaid land, with the aforesaid rents, which is aforesaid, with the appurtenances, to the said William and his heirs or assigns from the Lord in chief of the fee according to measurement, and as it is assigned to the said William by ancient fixed bounds and limits, freely, quietly, in peace, hereditary, for ever; in meadows, marshes, ways, paths, waters, pastures, turbaries, commons, wreck, in all easements, save only in forinsic (foreign) service in all things the Lord in chief of the fee as is due therefrom and customary.

But I, the aforesaid Philip, and my heirs and assigns, bind ourselves to warrant and acquit and defend forever against all men, the aforesaid land and appurtenances, together with the aforesaid rents, to the said William and his heirs and assigns. And that this my gift and grant, and confirmation of my present charter, may remain ratified and established in the future, I have strengthened this present deed with the impression of my seal.

In 1314 to 1375 we find Philip de Angulo and his son John holding a fee nominally of the Earl (it appears to have remained in their family notwithstanding the charter to William de Rupe in 1298), but the domain seems then to have passed to the Shirburns, who held it for two centuries; their dwelling, or Castle, as also of the de Angulos, was that of which a small part still stands at the head of Angle creek, behind the Church, and is still called Angle Castle.

A square tower, showing three storeys, with windows and fireplaces, is all that now remains, but at a short distance there stands an old Norman Columbarium, or Pigeon-house, still in a wonderful state of preservation. This was supposed to indicate the dwelling of a Baron in Norman times, as none of less rank might keep pigeons. In Owen s time, Angle Bay ran out shoal, as it does now, 'saving neere the towne, where is good landing at all tymes of the tyde;' we therefore can conclude that the de Angulos and Shirburns were able to bring their ships right up to their Castle walls.

John Cradock of Newton was a Juror in 1327. Another John held lands in Castlemartin in 1347; he died in 1350, the same year as Nicholas de Shirburn, and Roger (Fenton says Robert), his son, then aged seventeen, married Margery de Shirburn, Nicholas s daughter, the day after her father's death.

On the death of her brother John in 1362, leaving only Alice, aged ten, Margery may have inherited Angle; Fenton calls her a daughter and co-heiress (with John).

Roger, or Robert Cradock, is buried at Angle, which makes it appear probable. He was called Lord of Newton in Roos (Roose, in Llanstadwell parish), his descendant, Sir Richard Cradock, married a daughter of Sir Thomas Perrott, and the heiress of Jestynton, and changed his name to Newton; he died in 1444, and is buried at Bristol; he was Lord Chief Justice of England. The family of Cradock, or Caradog, was descended from Prince Jestyn ap Owain ap Hywel Dda, who built Jestynton.

Robert de Valle , Lord of Dale, had property in Angle, for in an old deed he grants lands In Angulo to Stephen the son of Alexander de Angulo; and de Shirburn may have succeeded to the property by marrying a daughter of Stephen.

Commission to David Craddok and to Walter Mille, as justices for holding the Sessions in the County of Pembroke.

1402. Guy etc. to Master John Kermerdyn, our official, greeting etc. Whereas our beloved sons in Christ Sirs John Kydde, vicar of Angle, and Robert Salmon, vicar of the parish Church of St. Michael, Pembroke, intend, as they assert, to exchange such their benefices with one another and we are unable etc., we grant to you our power and authority etc. Dated at Lagharn, 23 September, 1402, etc.

1406 March 21st. Also on 21 March in the year abovesaid, at London, the same reverent father admitted Sir John Clifford to the parish Church of Angle of our diocese, on the presentation of the most excellent prince etc., Henry King etc., patron for this turn by reason of the temporalities of the priory of St. Nicholas, Pembroke, being in his hands by occasion of the war between himself and his adversaries the French; and him, etc., he instituted etc.,.

1447. Nicholas de Carew held lands in Angle of Edward de Shirburn, "by military service and suit of Edwards Court at Nangle." This Edward founded the Chapel of St. Antony believed to be the small Chapel behind the Church known as the Sailors Chapel or Fishermans Chapel.

In the Minister Accounts Excheques T. Q. 20 - 41I, Eliz. Schedule of Grants, Fines, Cartas, &c., relating to lands in the county of Pembroke, we find the following:

1566. Report of the Commission to suppress Piracy

Angle is mentioned as one of the two biggest villages in the Haven - Could there have been a good reason why this attention was drawn to the Village.

1595. George Owen writes in a MS. giving the course of the strata of coal and lime in Pembrokeshire:

'The second vayne of lymestone, and cheefest of the two, beginneth at the south of Milford Haven, west of the Nangle, at a place called west Pill, where the one side of the Pill you shall perceive the lymestone, and the other a red stone; which kulde of redde stone --accompanieth the veine of lymestone almost throweout, as it were a cognisance of the lymestone being hott and fine, and therefore the redde stone is in coller and substance like a stone burned with fire. This vayne . . . passeth estward. . . to Pater Church, Lanion, Lanfey, and to Williamstone by Carewe; and soe estward to St. Florens, and to the norther side of the towne of Tenby, where between it and the Windmills it also goeth to the sea, and . . . there it taketh water, and passing under the sea . . . sheweth itselfe right east of Tenby in the cliffes of Llanridean in Gower . . . about twenty miles from Tenby, all under salt water.'

1603. George Owen, writing of the islands round the coast of Pembrokeshire, says:

'Sheepe Iland, being neere the East side of MylFord at the entrance without the blocke House, which is but a small temper because as I guesse, sheepe have onely accesse thereunto; for at lowe water it is drye, and therefore scarce deserveth the name an Isand and hath nothings in yt worth the notinge. Further within the mouth of the havon on the same side, is the land called Ratt Iland, but of the inhabitants more comonlie called Thorne Iland; this is a prettie Iland but verie little, full of deepe Grasse, a muskett shotte from the mayne; this and the last before ys the land of Water Rees esq.re.

Owen mentions Sheep Island elsewhere as Shippe, and that it is only accessible on foot after half ebb, and speaks of the remains of a tower, built on the narrow neck of land approaching the island, which served the country folk and their cattle as a refuge from the raids of the Welsh. This tower has now disappeared, but Fenton says it was standing in Elizabeth's time, and that it was the Norman settlers who used it; but the earthworks, which are still visible, point to Danish origin: probably the tower was added to these.

There are also earthworks traceable above west Pickard Bay three-quarters of a mile to the east of Sheep Island.

Speaking of notices to quit, George Owen says: The farmer then was the old tenant at Midsummer to remove out of the old Hall house."

Henry Owen in a note says: The farmers houses as distinguished from the cottages, so used also in Galloway the chief house in the manor, was in many parts of England called the Hall House. In his list of Pembroke shire Manors, George Owen gives in Castle Martyn Hundred, Nangle, Hall place in Nangle, thus showing that there were two separate manors. In his notes Henry Owen says: "In Lansdowne MS. Sir John Perrott is said to have held the moiety of a manor, there styled that of "Nangle alias Halecorte" (does this mean the manor of Hall only not of Nangle?), and also lands of Studdock, in that parish Sir John Perrott also held land at Pennar, Wallaston, Lanbeath, East and West Popton Redhill, Shutlake, Moreston, the mill at Pemboke Ferry, Benton, also Linney and Frains Lake.

In another list of the Manors in Elizabeth's reign George Owen gives:

Castell Martyn Sr. Edward Herbert of Powis. (d 1594)

Nangle Walter Rees, curia bidem.

Halle Place in Nangle Perott.

Stacpoole Stanley.

Estington Perott.

Henllan Whyte.

It is curious that in so small a place there should be two manors, but such was evidently the case, and to this day the Squire's residence is always alluded to by the villagers as Hall not the Hall.

Anno 19 of Henry VIII., the Collectors of the Tallage were diverse gentlemen and gentlewomen of the best accompt who owned lands in these Vynyes or Lord-ships ; those for Nangle were:

Thomas Perrott, armiger.

Elizabeth Tankard, vidua

1613. Lewis Dwnn in his Visitation mentions that in 1613 John Devereux, son of Patrick Devereux, gent., of Ireland, married Margaret, daughter of John Harries, of Hall Nangle, and that Owen Margan, BA., was then its Rector. Patrick and Margaret Devereux had a son, John, and a daughter, Elizabeth, who married William Bangwm (Beneger?) of Castell Martyn

Lewis Dwnn also speaks of William Kiner (rather Keener), eldest brother of John Kiner, alderman of Harffort, marrying Jowan Kembl of Angel. Their son William Kiner of the Hawl off Angel married Richard Rawd (probable Rowe) of Keel Martyn

Fenton in his Tour in 1811 also speaks of Hall as belonging till of late years to a family called Kinnar. (The field behind the house still bears the name of Kenner's Meadow). Among the twenty- four Common Councilmen, from whom the first Mayor of Haverfordwest (John Howell) was elected, occurs the name of John Kynner.

Fenton mentions a tradition that three sisters, co-heiresses, built each a house in Nangle; one the Castle, one Hall and one a building now called the Nunnery, probably also used at some time as such; but he gives no date, and there is no evidence that I can find in any other record to confirm the statement.

1633. According to Cawdor MS 26/1000 the open fields to the South and west of Angle had not been enclosed.

1786. John Campbell of Stackpole purchased the Bangeston estate.

1794 circa. [St. Petrox] extract from a Letter from Cha[rle]s Pigott Pritchett, rural dean of Pembroke , to William Stuart Bishop of St Davids

"The state of the churches in my district is now become so decent and in tolerable order that it is unnecessary for me to trouble your lordship with particulars. I wish I had as good an account to give of many of the vicarage houses. That of Nangle stands in most deplorable condition".

1795 December 8. Holyland. Adams to John Campbell esq..

I thank you for your kind letter which I received yesterday and perfectly agree with you in opinion relative to the exportation of corn, the supplying the Markets, and also that no language should be held to irritate mob, but unhappily great cause was given for alarm by Roch of Paskeston and Hervey of Angle buying up wheat to export. The report from the magistrates to the Duke of Portland's letter was that wheat is the shortest crop and that there is certainly not enough in the country for its consumption. If then the middling class are sufferers, will they not complain, and their complaints go a great way to irritate the lower orders of people who have most intercourse with them?

The farmers had withheld from supplying the Market for a fortnight to enhance the price (then too great), and notwithstanding every argument of policy and interest to them they would not be prevailed on until the people became tumultuous. Now they are justly alarmed, as are the corn factors. The farmers have promised a constant supply to the Markets and the factors will not export. So far good is come from evil. You seem to think that party jealousies were the cause, but I do assure you I never saw all ranks, parties and classes of people so irritated (farmers and factors excepted) and all joining in the same language. The heat is now, thank God, allayed, and I trust no cause will be given to revive it, for then no one can pronounce what consequences will ensue. Your name has been glanced at as acting in contradiction to the spirit of resolutions you brought forward at the quarter sessions by letting Bangeston to Harvey. I told Mr. Mirehouse of it, and afterwards when it was reported he was concerned with Harvey I desired Mr Hand to tell him of it that he might justify himself: enclosed is his letter to me and my answer.

Since Harvey has declared Mirehouse is not concerned, but you'll see by M's letter to me there was a plan which he says you were unacquainted with. I mention this as I am zealous for your honour and think I should not act right by you in not acquainting you with it. The Fencibles with Captain Ackland and the Yeomanry paraded on Saturday last and will again next Market day, so that I hope all will be quiet. But I repeat it depends on supplying the Markets and no exportation. I hope Lady Caroline and the boys were well when you heard.

Miss Adams joins me in every good wish for you all.

Endorsed: Pray present my best respects to Mr. Greville when you see him.

NLW. MS. 1352 B. ff, 310 14,

1801. Number of families in Angle Parish = 72

1805. John Mirehouse bought property of Angle from Lord Cawdor

1810. There is a record of a Sailing ship being built at Angle, the only one which appears on the registers of the ports of Milford or Pembroke. It would have appeared to have been a vessel of 29 tons.

1823 22nd March . John Mirehouse died and was buried in Angle Church. He was a great agriculturist and improved the output of the land in the area considerably - see Edward Law.

1894 January. Loch Sheil a ship with a cargo of whisky went down off Thorn Island, much was alleged to have been smuggled ashore by Angle residents. According to Mason writing in 1905:

"On the night of the 30th January, 1894, a large Merchant ship named the "Loch Shiel" laden chiefly with cases of Scotch whisky for Australia, on making the Haven for shelter, ran aground on the rocks at the back of Thorn Island, practically the northern boundary of West Angle Bay. On this occasion Mr. Mirehouse, of Angle, and the crew of the lifeboat, did some brave work in rescuing the crew of the unfortunate ship, which ultimately became a total wreck. The cargo and wreckage floated about the harbour for weeks after, the Salvage of which did not all find its way to the Receiver of Wrecks. Perhaps the following sidelights by Mason will demonstrate:-

Some Cottages not very far from the scene underwent rapid internal alterations smooth walls freshly papered where cupboards appeared before. On an occasion of a villager's marriage at Dale, which took place shortly after the wreck, a yacht laden with a visiting party from Pembroke Dock, fired a salute from two Cannon on board. Which, by the way, disturbed all the crows in the surrounding woods - not a few - which, if not very musical, added fresh interest to the event of the happy couple and procession returning from the Church. The visitors from the yacht were duly invited to partake of supper on shore, and on sitting down to a well-provided table, each yachtsman faced a bottle of whisky - manufactured on the premises, no doubt. However, it tasted Scotch; and contributed to the making of much joy during the evening, finally rendering beds and blankets superfluous articles to the yachting guests that night.

1904 Col. B. W. B. Mirehouse was local landlord. Angle Estate had belonged to the Mirehouse family since John Mirehouse; a Cambridge agricultural student came from Cumberland to farm at Brownslade. He was a schoolfellow and friend of Byron.

Brownslade is now part of the Castlemartin Tank range.

Angle, The Hall of.

Fenton recorded a local legend that three co-heiresses decided each to build a residence at Angle: one built a Castle, the other a very handsome building in the village, and the third built a mansion a little way out of the village, to the south-east called the Hall which appears in its day to have been very respectable and belonged till of late years to a family of the name of Kinner, a name that still exists in the village. The Kinners were engaged in trade and farming at Angle and Haverfordwest, and intermarried with families like the Voyles, and Walter of Roch. In 1587 Sir John Perrot was Lord of the manor of Hall place in Nangle. The herald, Dwnn, in 1613 recorded the pedigree of William Kiner off the Hawl off Angel The family continued at the Hall for nearly two more centuries; John Kinner was assessed at four hearths in the Hall in 1670; and William Kinner was mayor of Pembroke in 1703. The house is described in 1739 as The Hall alias Court House in Angle. In 1786 William Kinner was owner-occupier of Hall lands while John Hook Campbell owned a part of the same lands. Early in the 19th century the Hall was purchased by John Mirehouse of Brownslade and became the main seat of that family.

Notably an improving landlord and an enterprising farmer, the new owner was also a JP, and in 1810 High Sheriff. He improved the Hall as a residence which his descendants through the female line still occupy. The Tithe Schedule 1841 describes John Mirehouse as owner of Hall Manor , with George Thomas as farming tenant there, one of the fields being known as Kiners meadow. The estate eventually passed to R B Levett who had married a Mirehouse daughter and their son R

W B Levett took the surname Mirehouse in 1864. R. W. B. Mirehouse of the Hall was High Sheriff in 1886 and owning an estate of 3,450 acres.

Population

According to the Census 1831 1841. There was a decrease in population in Angle parish of 74 from 458 in 1831 to 388 in 1841. In 1841 there was 100 houses inhabited and 6 uninhabited. The population consisted of 160 males and 228 females. The decrease continued long term because the population in 1951 was recorded as 317.

1834 Topographical Dictionary of Wales.

Angle, or Nangle, a parish in the hundred of Castlemartin, county of Pembroke, containing 458 inhabitants.

This parish is situated at the south-western extremity of the county, and in an angle of Milford Haven, fording excellent anchorage for small vessels; from which circumstance it probably has obtained its name. Limestone of very excellent quality is found here in abundance, which, being susceptible of a fine polish, is formed into mantelpieces, and a considerable portion of it is burnt for manure. The female inhabitants are employed in platting straw for bonnets, hassocks, and matting, and, during the season, the men are occupied in dredging for oysters. The living consists of a sinecure rectory and a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of St Davids, the former rated in the King's Books at £10 10. and in the patronage of the Crown; and the latter rated at £5 19s. 2d. endowed with £400 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Bishop of St David s; two-thirds of the tithes are appropriated to the rectory, and one-third to the vicarage. The Church is dedicated to St. Mary. A school for the gratuitous instruction of about twenty-five poor girls is entirely supported by Mrs Mirehouse of Brownslade in the parish of Castlemartin.

Near the entrance of the Haven are the remains of an ancient building, called the block-House, of the origin or purpose of which there is no historical record: From its situation it appears to have been erected for the protection of the entrance, probably in the reign of Henry VIII., or Elizabeth; but, from the excellency of the masonry some tourists have ascribed to it a Roman origin. Near the Church is a mansion called the Hall the property of John Mirehouse, esq., of Brownslade, to whom the whole parish belongs, and now in the occupation of a tenant. The average annual expenditure for the support of the poor is £229. 16s.

PARISH OF Angle. - On the 26th of December I visited the above parish, which is served by the same Clergyman as Warren. He resides at Angle. There is a small school in the village kept by a person who is also a Baker and keeps one or two cows. The school had been broken up for the Christmas holidays, and would not be open for the next three weeks. The master receives annually from the sinecure Rector, the Rev. W. North, Professor of Latin Literature at St Davids College, Lampeter, £5 for educating eight poor children of the Parish; and an additional £5 from Mrs. Mirehouse, the lady of the principal resident proprietor of the parish for educating 10 others. The inhabitants of the village are chiefly fishermen. The labourers who live in the parish are very poor. Wages are 8d. per day with food, or 1s. on their own finding. Mr. Dalton informed me that there had not to his knowledge been any wrecking for the last four or five years. Wrecking was not confined to the labouring class, but extended also to the farmers, who would not scruple to take possession of any articles which might be thrown ashore. The schoolroom was open-roofed, rendered, and in good repair. It was part of a dwelling-house. The schoolmaster's mother lived in the other part. The proprietor of the parish is paid £3. 10s. per annum for the house. There was a garden belonging to it.

(In 1935 Angle - a report of county school inspections singled this school out as being the worst in the county as far as vulnerability to disease and epidemic because of primitive hygiene facilities.)

During the Second World War land was taken over for an airfield for coastal defence.

Pembroke Dock was a large seaplane base with squadrons of Sunderlands as well as smaller seaplane.

One Sunderland had problems when its hull was damaged by wreckage when taking off after carrying out a rescue at sea. It was impossible for it to land on water as the hull would have been torn right open so it made a landing on the grass of Angle airfield.

Barri John de 1301 granted the advowson of Penally to Acornbury Priory," an Austin nunnery in Herefordshire, and that of Manorbier to the Priory of Monkton 1324 John de Barri was seised of five Knight's fees at Manorbier of the value of 100 marks. It is probably of this John that there is the effigy in Manorbier Church, he was a witness to the Angle charter of 1298. Shortly before that, he by two fines passed his lands in Ireland to his nephew David, who, upon his uncle's death, claimed the lordship of Manorbier against Richard Simond who had married the daughter of Nicholas de Carew. The grant to Acornbury may be accounted for by the fact that Barri Ann de 1301 daughter of John daughter, was prioress of the nunnery at Acornbury Priory in He also had 2 sons

charterXXXII,

Bangeston.

According to RCAM.

The mere "shell of a mansion" seen by Fenton (Tour, 404) has practically vanished, and in its grounds immediately to the north-east now stands a coast-guard station. The site of what was once the fish-pond is easily found. Visited, 8th June 1922.

The earliest record of the Benegers of Bangeston appears to be in 1172, when a branch of the family took part with Strongbow in the Irish Invasion. There is an Irish saying that anything very astounding beats Banagher. Could that have arisen from any feats performed by the Benegers? One Ralph Beneger of Bangeston rebuilt Pwllcrochan Church in 1342. It contains two inscriptions recording his name, and an effigy of him in his canonical habit, as Rector.

Griffith Dawes of Bangeston is the next owner of whom we hear, though how it became his does not appear, possibly by marriage with a Beneger heiress. He was the son of Henry Dawes, by Lettice, daughter of William Walters of Roch (her brother's daughter, the famous Lucy Walters, went to France and there met Charles II., by whom she became the mother of the ill-fated Duke of Monmouth). Henry Dawes was the son of Griffith Dawes, whose widow Joan, daughter of Richard Fletcher, married Henry White of Henllan, near Pwllcrochan (now a ruin), who was Sheriff in 1592.

Griffith was the son of Nicholas Dawes, by Katherine Butler of Johnston. Griffith Dawes of Bangeston was Sheriff in 1665. His only daughter and heiress, Ann, married Griffith White, son of Henry White of Henllan, who was Sheriff in 1658. The Whites were a very old Tenby family, and acquired Henllan through Jestina Eynon, daughter and heiress of John Eynon of Henllan, who married John White. One Griffith White of Henllan, three times Sheriff, was buried in Rhoscrowther Church in 1589. Henry, or Harry Dawes, father of Griffith Dawes of Bangeston, appears, according to Lewis Dwnn, to have lived at Castlemartin. This fits in with the theory that Bangeston came into the family by Griffith's marriage; but it is also possible that Henry lived at Castlemartin during his father's lifetime, if his father was at Bangeston.

On June 16, 1686, Griffith Dawes of Bangeston, or, as it is put, of Banaston in the Parishe of Nangle, esq.re., Thomas Lort, of East Moor, Manorbier, and Francis Dawes of Pembroke, gent., with Devereux Hammond, James Lloyd and Francis Smith of Tenbie, gents., as representatives of Alice Bowen of Gloucester spinster bought from Thomas Williams of St. Florence, for £290 10s., the land of Carswell (at St. Florence), then occupied by Richard Rowe, for the relief of the poor and aged of Tenbie. The farm, to this day, belongs half to the Trustees of the Tenby Charities, and half to the Rector and Churchwardens of St. Mary's, Tenby.

Griffith Dawes of Bangeston, as before stated, had an only daughter, Ann, who married Griffith, son of Henry White of Henllan. Griffith died before his father, leaving an only Child, Elizabeth, who thus inherited Bangeston from her grandfather. Griffith Dawes of Bangeston died January 16, 1692, aged seventy, his monument, with a small marble coat of arms bearing the three Daws was one of three monuments which were rescued from destruction when the south transept of Angle Church became ruinous, and was pulled down. They were replaced a few years ago, pieced together as far as broken fragments would allow, in the north transept. One of the other two is a plain grey marble tablet to Mrs. Elizabeth Pritchard, sister of Mrs. Alice Dawes (probably Griffith's wife), who died January 17, 1725, aged eighty-six; the other, a handsome marble monument surmounted by a coat of arms, to Brigadier General Thomas Ferrers, the third Husband of Elizabeth White, granddaughter of Griffith Dawes of Bangeston, who died October 26, 1722.

Elizabeth White married four times.

First, Thomas Lort, son of Sampson Lort of East Moor, Manorbier (Sampson Lort, John Lort of Prickerston, and Sir Roger Lort of Stackpole were brothers; sons of Henry Lort of Stackpole, Sheriff in 1619). Grandfather Dawes is said to have disapproved of the match, and to have hurried across the fields from Bangeston to Angle Church to stop the wedding; but Thomas (a sailor) and the wily Elizabeth had got a chaplain with a special licence at the boat-house at the foot of Bangeston Hill, and so outwitted the irate old gentleman, crossing the Haven afterwards in a boat. Elizabeth's second Husband was Richard, Viscount Bulkeley; then came Brigadier General Thomas Ferrers, to whom she erected the marble monument, on which she describes him as her truly mourned and dearly beloved Husband. Lastly, she married John Hook, who was Sheriff in 1755, and who survived her. She left no children by any of her Husbands, and John Hook therefore bequeathed Bangeston to his godson and namesake, John Hook Campbell, Lyon King at Arms; he was a grandson of Sir Alexander, who married Miss Lort of Stackpole, brother of Sir Plyse Campbell, and uncle of John, first. Baron Cawdor; he died in 1795. His son Matthew married. Ellstacia, daughter of Francis Basset, of Heanton Court Devon, and had a son, also Matthew (who married Anne daughter of William Adams of Holyland, and died without issue), and three daughters, coheiresses; of whom Eustacia married her cousin Sir George Campbell, G.C.B., brother of John, First Baron Cawdor; he died in 1821, leaving no issue. Matthew Campbell appears to have got into money difficulties which obliged him to sell Bangeston; the valuable lead roof was stripped off, and everything removed that could be turned into money, and the bare walls soon assumed the look of ruin and decay.

This must have happened after 1789, as Richard Gough, in an Addendum to Camden, mentions Bangeston as then occupied, and Fenton in 1811 laments its ruined state and recalls its remembered hospitality, therefore the dismantling must have occurred sometime between these two dates. Fenton also mentions its Norman founder; if this is correct he must have founded an older house than the ruin we now see, whose Long, unfortified facade, large oblong windows and general sumptuous style point to much later and less troubled times, when the fear of the enemy was not constantly before mens eyes. The walled enclosure immediately in front of the house, now overgrown with trees, and a carpet of daffodils in spring, called the Bowling Green. There is a large kitchen garden with magnificently high walls, an artificial pond in the wood adjoining, and traces of an old watermill; also an avenue of beeches, leading away to the westward, still recalls the glories of the old house.

Matthew Campbell was a great friend of Fenton s, and entertained him at his house in Pembroke on his Tour in 1811.

Bangeston, with Hall Angle, and the bulk of the Angle property, was bought in 1805 by John Mirehouse, esq., from Lord Cawdor, and remains in his family to the present day. Bangeston being a ruin, Hall became the dwelling house, but at the time of purchase the family resided (as Lord Cawdor's tenants) at Brownslade, and did not take up their residence at Hall until 1864.

Beneger of Benegeriston -- Beneger. —

According to Owen

A family long resident in the county, who gave their name to Bangeston, formerly Benegeriston. There are four Bangestons, namely, in Angle, St Mary's Pembroke, Stackpole and St. Issell's. The Benegers held, as co-parceners with Wogan and Robelyn, two fees of the Earl at Cosheston in 1246, 1324, and 1348.

Beneger John 1300 was seneschal of Pembroke in 1300, and in that office was a witness to the charter of Martin Philip the son of Martin. Thomas, "

Beneger William had passed, by a fine, to Symon Richard a messuage and sixty acres of land at Aylwardston" (Alleston). We find many of the family jurors at Pembroke and Tenby in the 14th century.

Fenton states that "Beneger, of Benegeriston, were men of great note in Pembrokeshire," and observes . " a branch was in the suite of Strongbow on the Irish expedition, who perhaps, might have laid the foundation of a family of that name in Ireland."

de Beneger Adam is mentioned by Giraldus Cambrensis.

Henry, or Harry Dawes father of Griffith Dawes of Bangeston, appears, according to Lewis Dwnn, to have lived at Castlemartin. This fits in with the theory that Bangeston came into the family by Griffiths marriage, but it is also possible that Henry lived at Castlemartin during his father's lifetime, if his father was at Bangeston.

Dawes Griffith was the son of Dawes Nicholas by Butler Katherine of Johnston .

Dawes Griffith of Bangeston was Sheriff in 1665. His only daughter and heiress,

Campbell Matthew brother of Campbell John, First Baron Cawdor, Campbell Matthew appears to have got into money difficulties which obliged him to sell Bangeston. Bangeston, with Hall Angle, and the bulk of the Angle property, was bought in 1805 by Mirehouse, John, esq., from Lord Cawdor, and remains in his family to the present day

Bayvil,

A Topographical Dictionary of Wales - S. Lewis. 1834. Bayvill,

A parish in the hundred of Kemmes, County of Pembroke, South Wales, 3 miles (ENE) from Newport, containing 160 inhabitants. This small parish, which is situated in the northern part of the county, and within a short distance of the coast is intersected by a tributary stream, which rises to the north of the Church, and falls into the river NeVERN near its influx into the sea at Newport bay. The living is a discharged vicarage, consolidated with that of Moylgrove, in the archdeaconry of Cardigan, and diocese of St Davids, rated in the King's Books at £5, and endowed with £800 royal bounty. The Church is dedicated to St. Andrew. There is a place of worship for Independents. The poor are supported by an average annual assessment amounting to £24. 5.

The Parish Church Dedicated to St Andrew the Apostle RCAM

The Church consists of a single chamber, 45ft by 18ft with no structural division between nave and chancel. A double bell cote surmounts the western Gable. The windows have square wooden caements. The floor is flagged. the font is 20in square by 8in deep, internal measurements, and stands on a short circular pillar; the total height is 26in. The single Bell is dated 1688. the churchyard is roughly circular. It is reported locally that the stone bearing the inscription VITALIANI EMERITO, which was removed from Cwm Gloyn farm to NeVERN churchyard originally stood in Bayvil churchyard – Visited 24th June 1922.

St Andrew, Bayvil Church History

St Andrew, Bayvil - "St Andrew's is thought to be an early nineteenth century rebuilding of a medieval Church although no perceptible early fabric remains. Indeed the Church is valued for its survival as a modest but evocative late Georgian Anglican box with Gothick windows, and a completely intact, single chamber interior."

Church of St. Andrew the Apostle.

This benefice was appropriated to the Abbey of St. Dogmaels in Kemes, probably by Robert Martin, Lord of the Lordship Marcher of Kemes.

It is evident, however, that there was formerly a rectory here, as in 1493 Hugh ap Thomas was presented to the Rectory of Bayvil by the Abbot of St. Dogmaels.-Episcopal Register.

On the 7th May, 1691, Griffith Rice, curate of Bayvil and Moylgrove, subscribed to the King's Supremacy. (Watsons's Subscrip.)

It would appear from this that Bayvil and Moylgrove parishes were probably at that time united, and continued so until 22 March, 1879, when they were disunited under an Order in Council. Education – 1847 – The Blue Book – The State of Education in Wales

The parish has no resident Clergyman, it is agricultural but the rates of wages is unknown It is stated that the moral character of the population is good. There are no resident landed proprietors and they do not subscribe to the maintenance of Schools. There are no farmers paying more than £100 per annum in rent. The people for the most part cannot read or write. The means of education for the poor are not sufficient and the number of children going to no school could not be ascertained – No remedial plan was suggested by the Informant; Vicar of the Parish the Rev David Evan Morgan of Moylgrove Cardigan

Pant y groes Mound

This is a circular mound, probably sepulchral, placed about 300 yds south east of Pant y groes farmstead in the parish of Moylgrove, the boundary line of the parish running between. The mound has a circumference of 300ft, and a height of 5ft. It is grass grown and presents no appearance of disturbance, other than by the ploughing of the field which has doubtless reduced its height – visited 23rd June 1914

Crugiau Cemes RCAM

This group of sepulchral mounds consists of what George Owen, the historian of Pembrokeshire, writing about the year 1600, calls “four little tumps of earth and yet can be 40m off, viz from Penplymon [Pen Plynlumon]”

Fenton in his Historical Tour refers to the mounds as follows: - I come to Crugiau Cemaes, a very large group of tumuli, very conspicuous, perfect and untouched, but the greater number so altered by the intersection of hedges and the repeated process of the plough, that it requires an eye much in the habit of examining such elevations to discover them: this cluster with an exception to that on Dry Barrows and the adjoining fields near Orielton, is the largest I have found in the county. About a century or more [ie circa 1690] one of them was opened, and by the selection still appearing there is every reason to suppose without any sort of judgement to direct operations”

In Gibsons edition of Camden's Britannia (1695) is the following by Edward Lhuyd :- “ In this county there are divers ancient tumuli or artificial mounds for urn burial, whereof the most notable I have seen are those four called Krigeu Kemaes, or the Barrows of Kemaes. One of which a gentleman of the neighbourhood, Mr Lloyd of Kwn Gloin, out of curiosity, and for the satisfaction of some friends, caused lately to be dug; and discovered therein five urns which contained a considerable quantity of burnt bones and ashes. One of these, together with the bones and ashes it contained was lately presented to the Ashmolean Repository at Oxford”

At the present time six mounds are clearly discernible; the existence of others may be suspected. Of them the following is a more particular account, beginning with the most southerly, over which passes the boundary between Bayvil and Nevern parishes.

1] Circumference 150ft height 4ft flat to grass covered

2] In the hedge of the field next to that bearing OS.bench Mark 562.5; circumference 300ft height 10ft gorse covered; disturbed; small White quartz stones scattered around.

3] At OS bench Mark 642 and 20 ds from 2]; circumference 50ft; height 10ft; gorse covered; disturbed top and west.

4] At about of 3] at the junction of the parishes of Bayvil Moylgrove and Nevern; circumference 300 ft height 8ft gorse covered ? Disturbed.

5] Ten yds east of 4] and just within Nevern parish: circumference 350ft height 10ft gorse covered; disturbed from summit; small White stones about.

6] Ten yds north east of 5] circumference 200ft height 5ft; gorse covered; much disturbed

Y Gaer

This is an oval shaped enclosure on a farm named Plas y Merchant, having a length of 200ft and a breadth of 100ft. The bank has disappeared in places, but at the northern end of the enclosure has an exterior fall of about 3ft to a shallow ditch. Elsewhere the enclosed area is almost on a level with the top of the bank. The entrance was probably on the south west. On the 26th May 1920, our Inspecting Officer visited the position to see a stone lined grave which had been revealed by the plough a few days previous. The interment had been made directly within the earthen bank, and slightly to the east of north. The grave measured 6ft by 15in by 12in deep, and was formed of flat stones of good size. It was orientated east and west. A portion of a human cranium was found at the west end and two phalanges at the east end but nothing was discovered to give date to the interment. The size and orientation of the grave point to a comparative late period. The bank showed signs of two other graves , which had fallen in or been crushed by ploughing – visited 26th May 1920

Y Gaer, Bayvil;Caer Bayvil Hillfort

A ploughed-out oval earthwork enclosure, about 50m north-south by 30m, set upon the tip of a gentle west-facing spur & showing a south-west facing entrance: limited excavation, in 1979, showed that the current earthworks represented a ditched & ramparted circuit, the rampart being stone-revetted internally; this had replaced an earlier circuit, defined by parallel pallisade trenches; structural features, associated with these circuits, were noted in the interior & a single possible later prehistoric pot sherd was recovered; the enclosure proved to be filled by grave-cuts, generally oriented east-west, some containing cists; a skeletal fragment yielded an uncalibrated radio-carbon date centring on the 7th century AD. The trial excavation carried out by Dyfed Archaeological Archaeological Trust, September 1979

Begelly St. Issell's parish, county of Pembroke. Messrs. Thomas Stokes and Co., proprietors.

Persons employed:-

Males Female

Adults 58 Adults 20

Under 18 Under 18 9

Under 13 Under 13 1

Steam power, 46 horse, employing for winding and raising water.

Mr. Thomas Stokes, esq., proprietor.

He replied to the printed queries and states:-

“That the air in the Thomas Chapel Mines is conveyed through roads driven through the coal for the purpose and thence to the upcast shaft. The mine is entered only by shaft. The winding chains and the gear are examined at stated periods and only four persons are allowed to descend at a time.

The coal is of the anthracite kind and varies from 18 to 20 inches in thickness. The main roads are never less three feet in height. The top stone is cut away to give the workers room to dig the coal. The workings below ground vary in extent but the depth does not exceed 38 fathoms. There are no noxious gasses in the Thomas Chapel mines. There has been only one fatal accident within the last two years which caused the deaths of three persons which was occasioned by the chains of the winding engine breaking while three persons were descending which caused them to be precipitated and killed on the spot. New chains of greater strength have now been provided. No protection was found necessary over the corves while descending or ascending the shaft. The coals are always drawn by children from the workings but none use the girdle and chain or chain but draw the skips along the level roads by means of a goff, the handle of which is made of wood. There are 14 boys from 10 to 18 years of age thus employed and no girls. There are also 23 boys from 7 to 18 years of age and 8 girls from 11 to 15 years of age employed in pushing wagons along the main roads on rails. The distance of the skips and wagons are hauled is about 1005 fathoms, In many parts of the works there are two children employed to each skip or wagon and the distance varies according to the circumstances. .

All the coals are drawn to the surface by machinery. The trammers commence work at 14 years of age and skip hauliers at 7 years old but the work does not require very young children. I know of no machinery that could be substituted in the room for the children. I think the age at which children should be employed ought to be limited to 10 years of age for at present the parents get their children employed as early as possible for the sake of the earnings and the consequence is that they become stunted in their growth. The number of working hours is eight and there is no relay of hands required. The children generally work two or three hours longer than the adults. It is of rare occurrence to work at night. There is no time allowed for meals but as the men work on piece, they stop when they think proper. Corporal punishment is not allowed and we forbid punishment in any way. There is no school attached to this colliery, nor society nor medical fund. Many of the men subscribe to benefit clubs."

. James Davies, 8 years old, trammer.

I have been below one years and work eight hours daily and earn 2s. a week which father takes. I work with him. I have never got hurt and assist to push trams with my brother who is 11 and has been down two years. The tram holds 7 cwt. We work longer than father. I never was at a day school but have been to Sunday School and can read in a little book.

David Thomas , 7 years old, trammer.

I have been here four months and work the same as James Davies and at the same sort of work. I do more and earn 2s. 6d. a week. I have never been hurt nor at a school and I do not go to Chapel. I do not know a letter.

. William Prout. 12 years old, skip haulier.

I began work at eight years old at skip hauling. I work eight hours and longer daily. I was born in Amroth parish. I never have been to Church or Chapel and cannot read at all. I earn 3s. 6d. And work with my father but paid by the Masters. I give the money to father. I have never got hurt.

. Stephen Gwyther, 11 years old, windlass hitcher.

I have been two years and a half at hitching on the carts to the windlass chain for the women to draw up the incline. I work ten or twelve hours a day and can earn 3s. 6d. a week. I work on my own account but give the money to my parents. I was at day school before work and can read a little but was never at writing. I do not attend Church or Chapel.

. George Lewis 16 years old, tram filler and trammer.

Wrought near here two years and was at coal work before. I work on my father's account and earn 6s. a week. Some men can earn 10s. others 8s. a week. I was at a day school once and was taught to read. I attend Chapel regularly and can read an easy book.

Thomas Phillips, 15 years old, skip haulier.

I began work three years since. I haul skips and earn 5s. a week. I have never been injured. I was at school and taught reading and writing. I attend Church regularly but I do not go to Sabbath or night school now.

. Isaac Day, 16 years old, tram hitcher.

I have been below ground for five years. I work as Stephen Gwyther but can do more. I earn 8s, and work for father. I read a little which was taught at Sunday School.

. Eliza Prout, 15 years old, trammer.

I began work when I was 11 years old. I work as the others and the usual hours. The more we draw the more we earn. I get 4s. a week. I go regularly to Chapel but cannot read nor write. My sister is 18 years old and she winds the windlass below. She can earn 4s. also. We take the money home. Sister reads a little.

. Hester Callan, 18 years old, windlass woman.

I have been employed three years below at winding the windlass. The work requires good strength. I work eight and ten hours daily and earn 4s. I receive money always from the master. Father works below also. I have never got injured and have learned to read at Sunday School but not to wrote. I always go to Church.

. Mary Day, 11 years old, trammer.

I have been nearly two years at tramming and work eight hours and ten hours. I was born in this parish. I have never got hurt. The coal trams weigh 7 cwt. I can earn 3s. a week for my parents. I always attend Sunday School and have learned a little reading there.

Sarah Davies, 15 years old, trammer.

I began work when I was 11 years old and was taken down by father who works at the heads now. I work with other girls and earn 3s. a week. I have never been hurt. I attend Chapel and Sunday School and have taught to read in the Testament.

Lewis Wilson, esq., proprietor.

Children and young persons are employed in put mines at hauling and winding up coal. It does not necessarily require young children but they seek employment and are put in couples to do what usually one older would be required to do. They work eight hours and haul in proportion to their ages and wages. The youngest occasionally work at night when the coal is required and then only on short shifts. The ages children begin to work are from seven years old but there is no fixed age. I think a limitation of age would be a barrier to their being brought up to working habits as I am not acquainted with any machinery that would render the employment of youth unnecessary. Females are employed here only at the windlass below ground and in screening and wheeling above. The weight of the coal in each tram drawn up by the windlass in the mainway is 4 cwt. and the skip drawn by children holds about one and half cwt. We have had only one fatal accidents in the last two years. Firedamp exists which we get rid of by careful ventilation and by fan blowing occasionally. The veins we are working are five to seven feet in thickness and the smallest height of our mainways is five feet. Every precaution is used to keep the gear and machinery in order and the people are repeatedly cautioned about descending too many at a time. Our mainways varying distance from the workings, from 8 to 20 fathoms. The colliers in this part work short hours and are paid by the principals in cash and the workmen and children are not subject to contractors in any way. The depth of our workings daily alter as the dip is very sharp, almost upright, at an angle beyond 45°. None carry coal on their backs, all are drawn up by windlass.

Mr. David Morgan, manager of the Broad-Moor Colliery. He stated that:-

“Boys commence working as early as seven years of age and females about 12. The latter are first employed above for a few years in separating coal from culm and when arrived at full strength they went to the windlass. The women here wind from the deep, and some of the veins are nearly upright, nearly 500°. Strong women will haul up by windlass 400 loads in a day’s work and their week’s wages rarely exceed 3s. 6d. to 4s. It is true they do not work the long hours which the women do in Carmarthenshire but they are more patient and enduring. Many married women work below and they do not object to the labour. There is much fire in the mines of Broad Moor. One died a short time since from explosion. We have no medical man attached, nor do the men subscribe to any medical fund. Many of them belong to a society held in the neighbouring village. Collier here are disabled from 50 to 55 years of age. They are satisfied with little earnings as they work short hours. Nearly one third of the keep cows and do a little gardening. None speak Welsh. The women and girls about here will not haul the skips, neither will the boys or men work at the windlasses. The lads earn 3s. 6d. to 4s. a week. girls who pick culm, 2s. a week, windlass women, 3s. weekly and the men are satisfied if they earn 18d. to 20d. per day. If business be brisk we work night as well as day on eight hour shifts.”

Hannah Bowen, 16 years old, windlass woman.

I have been down about two years and earn 3s. a week. It is good, hard work and I work from seven in the morning till three and four in the afternoon at hauling the windlass. I can draw up 400 loads of 1½ to 4 cwt. each. I have never been off work. I always have my breakfast before coming to work and get eat nearly every day. Father was a collier but he is now off with bad breath. He has been disabled for two years and is not very old. He does not know his age. He grazes the cow on the road side and that keeps us, with my work. We pay 40s. a year for the cottage. I can knit and sew but I do not read and have never been to any school but a Sunday School I did not make my dress. The tailor charged me 2s. 6d. for the work and I paid 4s. for the cloth. Whenever we work longer hours we take Bread and butter with us.

Benjamin Thomas, about eight years old, haulier of skips.

I began working twelve months ago and help my brother to haul skips in the seven feet vein. I have never got hurt. I work seven and eight hours. I get bacon meat on Sundays but not much meat during week days. I sometimes get oatmeal broth before going to work. The work is very hard and it is all day long running. I run with my brother, 22 score. father is dead and mother winds below with my sister. They earn 3s. a week each. I have three brothers who work below and they earn 1s. 6d,

3s. 6d., and 4s. weekly, all at skip hauling. "I cannot read but mother and brother George who is 14 years old, do. I wash my feet and face when my work is done and play about. The boys do not wear shoes in our pit."

[Very pitiful looking little fellow.]

Thomas Howard, aged 16, skip haulier.

I have been four years working below and so do every day for nine hours. The work is very fatiguing indeed. It is only once I got hurt since employed. A skip crushed my knee and kept me idle for some short time. We have much fire in the mine. I have never been burned myself but a great many of the boys and people have been. Three months ago many got burned by the explosion which took place from the breaking into an old working, not fatal to any. The only holidays we have about there are Christmas, New Year's Day and many take half a day when Narbeth Fair is on. The boys and women sometimes work at night.

[reads and writes pretty well and possessed a good knowledge of Scripture.]

Zacharias Harris, 13 years old, skip haulier.

I have been two years at work and earn 4s. a week and am employed 8, 9, and 10 hours daily. I take Bread and cheese down. I live a quarter of a mile from the works. I have never heard of any Commandments but attend Sunday School. The minister told me God made me. Mother and father work below.

[Cannot read. Very ignorant.]

William Thomas, 11 years old, skip haulier.

I began work 12 months ago and earn 4d. a day. I cannot say how many fourpences there are in a shilling. I have two brothers and one sister and none of us read yet.

Elizabeth Lawrence, 15 years old, Wheeler.

I have been 12 months wheeling coals and I work seven and eight hours daily. I earn 6d. a day. It is good hard work as the barrow holds a good weight of culm. I do not know how many loads I wheel. Father is a labourer and I think he earns 7s. a week. Mother is at home keeping house. He have no cow. I seldom go to Church and have done so twice or thrice this year. I have never heard of Jesus Christ nor of the Lord's Prayer.

[Very ignorant. The mother, who was present, appeared equally as stupid as the daughter, for she could not assist in any reply to my questions.]

James Bowen, esq., surgeon, Narbeth, county of Pembroke.

The population of Begelly and East Williamson is about 1163, forming strictly speaking, a mining population, the health and habits of whom I am well acquainted with. The diseases prevalent amongst colliers, as a class, are those of the lungs and air pipes and bronchitis I consider inseparable from anthracite coal working of which coal Pembrokeshire forms the principle bed. The average life of a collier is about 40 and they rarely attain the age of 45 years of age and in the entire population there are not six colliers of 60 years of age. The practice of taking children down the mines at the present early age had a manifest tendency to shorten the average duration of human life and it is, in my opinion, highly desirable that children should not be taken into the mines under the age of 12.

The collier population of this district, more particularly the males, are dirty and drunken in their habits. The cottages they inhabit are low and ill ventilated. The drainage is bad and their practice of living and sleeping in large numbers in the same apartment, tends much to the spread of disease.

Rev. Richard Buckley, rector of Begelly parish, county of Pembroke.

In my district there is one Sunday School belonging to the Established Church, the attendance at which is very unequal and uncertain.

There is one day school which is open from 9 a.m. to 4 p.m.

No school exists here in which children employed in labour are taught needle or other domestic work. If such schools did exist it would be difficult to persuade the colliers to send their children to them. The branches of education taught in the day school are reading, writing and arithmetic. In the Sunday School the instruction is exclusively scriptural. The same teacher superintends both schools and is fully qualified to instruct in the branches of education previously stated. He has not been trained to teach. The removal of the children and young persons from school at such early ages as 10 years, which is common hereabouts, to the mines, operates very injuriously as the foul air seriously affects their lungs and shortens the term of life. In a population of upwards of 1000 there are not six colliers 60 years of age. Children, when once they go to work, leave school altogether. Out of 60 boys in the parish school there are certainly not more than 10 that may have reached their twelfth years. We have none partly engaged in labour who go to the day school. A few of the day scholars who have gone to work attend the Sunday School and generally maintain their places in the head class.

Mining Complaint 1629

1629 In that year a plea was entered in the Court of Chancery by Walter Delahay of Bayard's Pool co,Pembroke and William Barlow, against James Davies of Begelly, clerk, and others, his agents, alleging that the complainants, being lessees of 200 acres "situated lying and being in the parish of Begeley in the county of Pembroke, in a place there called Willam Stone Ellinor, and of and in one other ... with the appurtenances commonly called and by the name of Tongyland lying and being within the parish of Begeley aforesaid, there is a highway from the parish of Jeffreston to Begely aforesaid" had been damnified by the said James Davies, who hath a coal pit on lands which adjoined those of the complainants, and who, with the other defendants "have lately, viz., in or about the month of June 1629, and divers times thence, sunk and digged several pits in and upon the said lands of the said James Davies very near and close adjoining to your said orators lands aforesaid" and have "very subtilly and cunningly by plot and practice contrived to undermine and to dig underground out of and from the said lands of the said James Davies into your orators land so that your orators coal pits and coal were by the aforesaid mining and digging filled with water and utterly drowned and overflowed with water running from the said James Davies's coal pits, to the great danger of the lives of your orators workmen there then working, whereby they were like to be drowned, and whereby your orators' tools wherewith your orators' said workmen then and there wrought were all lost, in so much as your said orator was driven to his much cost and charges to have twenty workmen and more to draw up the said water from your orators said coal pits, wherein nevertheless they your said orators prevailed not, by means of which said unjust practises combinations and underminining your orators utterly losing all their said coal and coal pits, whereas your orators before their said pits were drowned, digged and raised up the quantity or number of 100 barrels of coal daily out of your orators said pits. By reason whereof your said orators are damnified to the value of £100 and upwards".

The issue of the suit has not been followed up.

The above documents make it clear that East Williamston did not exist as a separate parish but was part of the parish of Begelly

(James Davies was Rector of the Parish from 1610 to 1650, William Barlow would be one of the Slebech family and witness to several agreements in the Slebech records. He is given as of Criswell (Cresselly) and Martletye)

Further, similar features occur to the N RCAHMW AP945035/67-8; 945039/50

A linear earthwork, representing a disused colliery tramroad, runs for some 635m west-south-west from a junction with the Saundersfoot Railway to SN 10880 07066 at the western edge of a large area of coal workings. The line of the tramroad and the coal workings are shown on the first edition Ordnance Survey 25in mapping of 1889.

From the junction with the Saundersfoot Railway, a further, similar linear earthwork is visible on aerial photographs, diverging from the railway to the east for about 200m to SN 1175 0710, bifurcating as it does so, possibly representing railway sidings.

The State of Education in Wales

1847 Education – and Coal mining

Parish of Begelly – The Rev R Buckby, the Rector gave a deplorable account of this parish, which, with the hamlet of Williamston, and parts of the adjoining parishes contains a mining population. Out of 70 marriages, in six only had the Brides not visibly been “enceintes”. Seduction (which in these cases is a term much more condemnatory of the one sex than the other deserves) is generally followed by marriage if the woman conceives; not otherwise.

The people are extremely cunning, but grossly ignorant, and with no real sense of their own interest. Families are often crowded together at night promiscuously, of all ages and sexes.

Underletting prevails to an extent which is highly injurious; the rent to the head-landlord is mostly paid by this system. The average of life is very short –not above 33 years, as appears from the register. This may be accounted for by the personal dirtiness of the miners, who never wash their bodies. Weddings are times of great rioting and debauchery. The intended bride and bridegroom live together for a considerable time previous to the marriage. They brew as much ale as they can, then sell it without a licence, to their friends who are expected to give more than the Market price. This is one way in which they raise money to begin the world with. There is also a similar custom called “cuk-makking” ie, cake making. The bride and her friends make cakes which are sold on the night of the marriage in the same way as the ale. All these customs are merely varieties of “biddings”.

The whole system works unmixed mischief. The population is mostly indigenous, not imported. The miners generally possess a small tenement on a holding for lives, which has in former times been granted them for electioneering purposes by the landowners; and this prevents their fluctuating much. They are utterly careless about sending their children to school, and about most other things. In the Hamlet of Williamston, on the confines of St Issells there are (so the Rev Mr Ashford, the Calvinistic Methodist minister informed me) 80 or 100 children of an age to go to school who are not within two miles of any day school. There has been an attempt to establish a British school, and £70 promised in five years; but the intended master had disappointed them. 1d per week this year had been more than the poor could pay, where the family is large. The children generally go to a Sundays school except some of the most ragged. Several of the collieries are under a religious influence –i.e. the agents are members of some religious denomination, and proselytize accordingly. Mr Asford had been nine years in Radnorshire and one and a half at Laugharne. He did not consider the people in Williamston to be any worse than in Radnorshire and Laugharne, except in the drunken celebration of weddings. There is neither Church nor Dissenting Sunday school in the hamlet. Between Begelly and Tenby in one direction , between St Issell's and Redberth in another , are distances of five miles with no schools in them worth naming. A common pitman's wages are about 8s or 9s per week. The only resident landowner is Captain Child, who requested me to insert the following memorandum in my Report:-

There is an endowment at St Issell's of £15 per annum. If this sum could be consolidated with an equal amount of subscriptions which I, and probably Sir R Phillips, would give from Begelly parish, and available fund might be created for the education of the poor in the neighbourhood. In order to the effectual application of this sum I am of opinion that a central site for a school building should be selected which would be available for the two parishes which belong to the same proprietors. Such a site might be found on the Moor near the intersection of the Tenby and Narberth sand Carmarthen and Pembroke roads. I would grant this for the purpose, and also provide stone for the building. This site would be most convenient in respect of access from all points of the two Parishes. The other proprietors in the two parishes would (I am of opinion) contribute to such a scheme. Saundersfoot, a populous and rising port, at which the chief part of the population in St Issell's lies, would be not more than two miles from the contemplated site: nor would any part of Begelly parish. Which is not already provided with a school be at a greater distance. This is a mineral and coal district; and it now in contemplation to build four new furnaces for the smelting of iron. This will greatly increase the demand for all, and therefore juvenile, labour. It becomes then the more important to provide such means of education as shall convey the greatest possible amount of instruction in the short time that is likely to be allowed for schooling; for it is scarcely to be calculated that from the increased demand for labour the children will be continued at school beyond 10 years of age. It is requisite to have a superior man to convey anything like the proper amount of information before this time. In order to obtain a superior man a good salary must be provided: for this purpose consolidation is absolutely necessary

January 1st 1847 signed John Child

Village school -- I visited this school on the 31st of December. The room is built in the churchyard, and the Rector considers the school to be strictly his own. He repeatedly told me that he had no Masters over him,. The present schoolmaster has held his position only 18 months, and there was no regular book of admissions. I filled up the column of attendance from those present. I heard eighteen Read the 3rd chapter of Joshua; all of them read fairly. The boy who had to name the Canaanish nations pronounced their names correctly. The master did not offer to question them. It was their custom in the day-school to read the Bible only as an exercise in reading and spelling. He does not even explain the words which occur. At my request he asked a few questions on the verses read by putting the verbatim into an interrogative form
One girl's writing was Fair: the rest, so far as I saw was very indifferent.

Carn School -- I visited this school on the 1st January 1847. It is situated in Begelly parish, but was established to accommodate the children of Newton, Yerbeston and Reynoldston parishes. The building was erected by a grant from the Government of £30 about 6 years ago. The site was granted by J H Philipps esq. of Williamston to Mr Benjamin Morris of Narberth, as trustee, upon lease for 99 years, at 6d per annum rent. Mr Morris informed me that he had offered to transfer this lease to a Baptist congregation, for the same term and on the same trusts as he himself holds it.

At the time of my visit the school had been closed for two years. The last person who had tried to keep it was the turnpike man at Catershook gate , about 2 miles off. It had been open under the present master only since the 19th of October 1846; since that date he had received 26s from school pence, his only source of income. He had previously been keeping school at Woodgate and Yerbeston, places in the vicinity. The poor could not afford to pay for their children. There were the master told me 60 children within reach of the school who were prevented by the poverty of their parents from attending. The lowest payment was 2d per week, for which reading only was taught; an additional penny was demanded for writing and arithmetic, respectively. The poor were anxious to educate their children, and were continually importuning the master to know what could be done to get a charity school. A meeting had been held about a month before my visit to raise subscriptions. The sum of £47 3s 6d had been promised to be paid within 5 years, but the whole scheme had come to nothing. The subscribers had split on the question whether the whole school should be made gratuitous, or whether any of the scholars should be called upon for payment. Few of these children were at that time going to a Sunday school. The nearest at Molleston was closed during the winter months.

I found only seven children present in the school. Of these seven, three were said to be reading the Bible and two the Testament. The master set them to reading the 5th chapter of St Matthews; none of them could read well, though doubtless this particular chapter had often been read over by all of them.

The Old Parish Churches of South West Wales by Mike Slater

The 14C north Chapel has two arches to the chancel and one to the nave. The nave, chancel and small south transept with a squint are all probably 13C. The lofty vaulted west tower is probably 16C but the battlements are later.

1847 The Parish Church Begelly St. Mary-(Glynne Welsh Churches .)

Has much of the general character of the district.

The plan is a west tower, nave, and chancel, with a north aisle ranging along the eastern portion only, and a small transeptal Chapel and porch on the south. The tower is tall and rude, tapering, with a clumsy battlement, and no string-course. At the north-east angle is a stair-turret. The belfry-windows, of two lights, are varying, pointed, and square-headed. On the west side is a doorway with plain arch, and label over it. The lower part of the tower is rudely vaulted in stone, as at Lamphey, opening to the nave by a clumsily formed arch. The base, as in the neighbouring Welsh towers, bulges out. The chancel-arch is pointed, with mouldings. In the north-east angle is the rood-door, and the steps remain. The portion of the north aisle which is west of the chancel-arch has a large piece of solid wall to the nave, with one very plain, misshapen, pointed arch. From the chancel this aisle is divided by two low, plain pointed arches, with a central, circular pillar of slender form. The transept opens also by a low, plain arch of similar form. The chancel is lower than the nave. On the south is a large lancet window. The east window is Middle Pointed, of two lights. In the north Chapel the east window is square-headed. On the south side of the nave is a trefoiled lancet. The other windows are modern, with sashes. The font has a square bowl upon a cylindrical stem. The date of this Church is doubtful, but probably the main part is First Pointed.

(Dedication Unknown) RCAM 1921

This Church was visited by Sir Stephen Glynne in 1847, his description of it being printed in Arch Camb 1886 p69. The edifice was thoroughly renovated in 1886, when several of its ancient features were swept away.

The present Church comprises nave 37 ½ feet by 14 ½ feet, chancel 20feet by 14 ½ feet, north aisle to chancel and part of the nave 36 ½ ft by 14 ft, south transeptal Chapel 9feet by 8½ feet, south porch, now converted into a vestry, and west tower.

In the south wall of the chancel is a plain piscine with aumbry above. The chancel arch is pointed, and on its western side are two corbels which supported the rood loft. The north aisle is separated from the chancel by two pointed arches. The north doorway, a plain pointed arch leads by descent of two steps to the interior; a stoup occupies the eastern side with a recess 9in by 8in by 11in immediately above it. The south doorway, which now gives access to a vestry, is similar. All the windows are modern. The font basin is square; it has been redressed, as is also its circular shaft. It may possibly be the original.

The tower 20 ½ feet by 18 ¾ ft exterior is of three storeys; the lowest is plain vaulted, and opens into the nave by a rude pointed arch and flight of three steps. The belfry lights are double lancets on three sides, with a square headed light to the north. At the northeast angle is a turret carrying 105 steps to the battlements which rest upon a somewhat shallow table; the stairway is lighted by narrow loops. At 4 ½ feet from the ground level is a plain stringcourse, above which the tower tapers slightly for its entire height.

Built into the left side of the low modern wall which borders the path from the gate to the north door are four moss-covered fragments of stonework, varying in length from 10 to 17 inches and having a depth of 7 ½ inches. They bear a pattern of a six rayed wheel within a circle; they appear to date from the 15 th century. Visited 22 April 1921.

Attached to Begally was the Chapelry of East Williamson , which although now a distinct parish, is still held with it; and George Owen (d 1613) speaks of yet another Chapel, that of St Thomas .

Non Conformist

Zion Methodist Chapel was built in 1828, a gallery installed in 1851 and rebuilt in 1866. The present Chapel, dated 1866, is built in the Simple round-Headed style, with a long-wall entry plan. The interior contains pews raked down to a gable-end pulpit. The school was built in 1845 and named after the teacher, Phillip Gunters's School. Zion is now Grade 2 Listed a a fine early grouping of Chapel, school and house.

Reynalton Chapel was built in 1867 and rebuilt in 1906. The later Chapel, dated 1906, is built in the later Vernacular style with stone walls, a slate roof and a gable entry plan. In 1993 it was still in use as a Chapel.

KingsMoor Methodist Chapel was built in 1837 and restored during the 1880's. The present Chapel, dated c.1885 is built in the Simple Gothic style of the gable entry type. The situation is very pleasing.

Chronicle Park Tumulus and Cromlech

"Near the parsonage house are the remains of a cromlech which has been thrown down: and in its vicinity is a tumulus" (Lewis Top. Dict. Wales. 1833).

The remains thus indicated are situated in the field next west to Chronicle Park House, about 500 yards west of the parish Church. Lying around are several large boulders from 6 to 7 feet in length, as also a still larger but partially buried stone which is most probably the capstone. Close by is a low mound which may have been formed by the displacement of the original tumulus: a hedge runs across the mound. The site appears to have no distinctive name, and that of "Chronicle" House may possibly stand for an earlier "Cromlech" House – Visited 23 April 1921

Mound Castle and Bailey

"Close to the churchyard is a round camp, 60 paces in diameter [at the level], a bank 5 feet high with a ditch round" (Pem Arch Survey 1885). A recent clearing of the ground has revealed the real nature of this work, namely as the remains of a mound Castle and its Bailey. The view obtained of the site from the summit of the neighbouring Church tower will leave no doubt upon the point. The mound has been reduced to a present height of from 5 to 8 feet above the surrounding level; the ditch is still clearly defined on the eastern and south eastern sides, though it has been much reduced and occasionally completely obliterated, doubtless when the upper part of the mound was removed. The bounds of the Bailey can be faintly traced on the northwest. ---Visited 22 April 1921

Burkeley Philipps esquire

The third son of the "Good Sir John" 4th Baronet and the younger brother of Sir Erasmus 5th Baronet and Sir John 6th Baronet.

He married Philippa Adams of Holyland Pembroke. Although in the family traditions he was of minor importance, being a younger son, the whole future of the Picton Estate stems from him. He had no children from his marriage but after the death of his wife he was reputed to have adopted an illegitimate daughter by a woman named Maria Philippa Artemisia and gave the young girl the surname "Philipps". Her real name was Mary Philippa Artemisia. Bulkeley. Philipps died in 1776 and after his death she married James Child of Begelly and she herself had a daughter whom she named Maria Artemisia. She died in 1786. Her daughter Maria Artemisia, married the son of the Vicar of Roch and Nolton, the Rev. John Grant, who succeeded his father in these livings. The father, the old Vicar, had been mad for some years.

This John Gant was said to have been the man who invented what was called the yard wheel for measuring distances and he was looked at askance in the Haverfordwest of that time running behind his peculiar wheel.

Their son was named Richard Bulkeley Philipps Grant. This boy's father, the Rev. John Grant, in addition to inventing the measuring wheel gained a great deal of notoriety because of his condemning those of his parishioners from Roch and Nolton who, whilst looting a wrecked ship containing a cargo of Gunpowder on Druidston Sands caused it to blow up, killing many and blinding others. He was said to have declared openly that it was an act of God punishing them for their wickedness. Maria Artemisia, upon the death of her first Husband, the Rev. John Grant married as her second the Rev. Alexander Gwyther, the Vicar of Yardley in Worcestershire. By him she had a second son who later became the Rev. James Henry Alexander Gwyther, Vicar of St Mary's Church Haverfordwest.

Richard Burkley Philipps Grant and his half brother, the Rev. James Henry Alexander Gwyther, in turn, inherited the vast Picton Castle estates, both changing their surnames to "Philipps", thus causing those of closer relationship to become disinherited.

1834 A Topographical Dictionary of Wales - S Lewis..

Begelly, a parish in the hundred of Narberth, county of Pembroke , South Wales , 5s miles (S by E.) from Narberth, on the road to Tenby, containing, with the Chapelry of Williamston, which supports its own poor, 996 inhabitants. The substratum of the soil in this parish is coal, of excellent quality, and in great request for the drying of malt and hops by the proprietors of breweries and distilleries: it is chiefly procured by a company under Sir R. B. P. Philipps, Bart., and J. M. Childe, esq., who are the chief proprietors of the soil, and receive one-sixth part, as their share of the produce: there are also some smaller proprietors, who exact one-fifth, and even one-fourth, part from those who work only on a limited Scale. A railway has been commenced from the mines, leading over Kings Moor to Saundersfoot, in the parish of St. Issels, which is now in progress, and which, when completed, will greatly contribute to promote the interests of the surrounding neighbourhood. Iron-ore is also found, both above and below the strata of coal, and, during the existence of the Pembrey Iron Company, was procured in great quantities and with considerable benefit to the proprietors; but, since the stoppage of those works, the search for it has been discontinued. The shale which is found with the coal exhibits many interesting specimens of the fern and Reed plants, and pyrites of iron have also been discovered.

The living is a discharged rectory, in the arch deaconry and diocese of St Davids, rated in the King s books at £12. 19. 2., and in the patronage of Sir R. B. P. Philipps, Bart. The Church is an ancient structure, in the early style of English architecture, with a lofty tower, and is pleasantly situated near Begelly Hall by the trees surrounding which it is partly concealed. The Chapel of Williamston is a rude structure without a tower, standing in the hamlet of that name. The parsonage-house is situated on part of a stratum of coal, which has been wrought all round it, and, if the excavation had been continued, it would have endangered the stability of the building. There is a place of worship for Calvinistic Methodists. Near the parsonage house are the remains of a cromlech, which has been thrown down; and in its vicinity is a tumulus supposed to have been raised to the memory of some unknown chieftain. The poor are maintained by an average annual expenditure amounting to £84 16s.

1825 road to Ferry Terminal at Pembroke Dock

One reason for moving the Irish Ferry terminus to Hobbs Point was the poor state of the turnpike between Haverfordwest and Milford. This road, built by Greville in 1791, was so bad in 1817 that the Secretary of the Post Office, Sir Francis Keeling, sent for Henry Leach, Collector of Customs and Controller of the Post Office Packet at Milford and told him that it would be impossible to maintain the mail for Ireland unless the road was improved. Leach in his report the following year attributed the lack of repairs to misappropriation of funds by the trustees of the turnpike. 1825 Telford surveyed this road and subsequently was asked to survey the route to Hobbs Point from St. Clear and Begelly. In order to help pay for the new road to Hobbs Point an additional' 1/2d surcharge was authorised on letters

Pembrokeshire Parsons.- Begelly

This living is now a rectory with the Chapelry of East Williamston annexed. No mention of the Chapel of East Williamston occurs in the Valor Eccl., but George Owen writing in 1594, states that it was then dependent on Begelly.

The same authority says that there was another Chapel of ease under Begelly, called St. Thomas Chapel.Owen's Pem. The site of this Chapel has now been lost. The Rev. Henry Phillips, Rector of Begelly who has recently made careful enquiry in the neighbourhood, says that he has failed to find any trace of a site bearing a name suggestive of a Church or Chapel near the village called Thomas Chapel in the parish, but there is little doubt that the site must have been in or close to that village.

Under the name of Urgelys Begelly Church with its Chapel was assessed in 1291 at £12, the tenths payable to the King being 24s. -Taxatio.

Blackpool Mill – see also Slebech

(Acc/to Sir Francis Dashwood.)

Blackpool Mill stands on the bank of the Eastern Cleddau which rises in the Prescelly mountains and runs down into Milford Haven past Blackpool. Recent research confirms that the bluestones at Stonehenge were cut from the Prescelly range in about 1700 BC and were hauled down the hills to Canaston bridge, about one mile from Blackpool, where they were launched on rafts for their voyage around the Milford Haven coast and then overland to Stonehenge, a distance of 135 miles as the crow flies. There were about 80 of these great stones, the largest weighing as much as 4 tons. It has been estimated that 5,000 men must have been required over a period of several years for this great undertaking.

In early times Blackpool was part of the vast forest of Narberth in which special rights were established and maintained. It is recorded in 1357 that "8s. was yearlie received of 91 burgages and 5 censuaries in the villages of Narbut, Templeton, Robertson, Caneston and Moylaston ... Id. for a certayne custom then caled virsilver and £4. lis. 3d. also for custome payd for lybertie of goings of cattle in the said forest" (Virsilver probably stands for fire-silver which was a payment made annually by tenants to the Lord as a sort of Hearth Tax or chimney money probably to compensate the Lord for the fuel taken in the forest for keeping the fires going).

Later in 1581 Morgan Phillips had a lease for "pannage of hogs and wild honey in the forest of Narberth". The pigs lived in the woods feeding off the nuts and mast from the trees a practice still to be found in parts of Europe and occasionally in Britain.

Much of the land in this area was a gift of local magnates to the Knights of St. John of Jerusalem in the 11th century. This religious order of Hospitallers had their Commandery at Slebech, which is about a mile down from Blackpool and on the opposite bank. It was then one of the most important Commanderies in Britain. Now all that remains of the buildings is the Knights Chapel which stands roofless, by the water's edge.

Following the dissolution of the Monasteries by Henry VIII, the land of the hospitallers was sold by the Crown to Thomas and Roger Barlow in 1646. They had previously held it as tenants. The Barlows were rich Tudor magnates with powerful connections at Court. Slebech remained in their possession for over 200 years, eventually passing to Ann, the only daughter of George Barlow. Her Husband died in 1766 and she married in 1773, John Symmons who subsequently sold the estate to William Knox. The latter may have bought the property in order to prospect for coal and silver; he carried out extensive mining trials at Minwear near Blackpool but failed to find any good seams.

In 1792 he sold the estate to Nathaniel Phillips through Mr. Christie, the founder of the famous London firm of auctioneers.

Nathaniel was a wealthy plantation owner from Jamaica, shipping sugar and rum from his estates to England. At his death Slebech passed to his daughter, Mary Dorothea, who married in 1822 Charles Frederick, Baron de Rutzen, a Polish nobleman and a relative of Field Marshal Potemkin, the favourite of Catherine the Great of Russia.

The estate now belongs to Sir Francis Dashwood Bart, of west Wycombe in Buckinghamshire. There is a reference to Blackpool itself in a lease by the Crown to John Watkins in 1555 of "Caniston Mills . . and all that pool called the Blackpool" at a rent of £7 0. 12 and an even earlier reference that "David Tew farmed the grist mill there called Canyston Mylne together with le Wayre (weir) and le Blake Pool at a rent of £10." It is interesting to note that Blackpool was otherwise called crooked Poole in 1609.

Before this both Canaston Mill and Blackpool belonged to Rhys ap Griffith who was convicted of high treason and forfeited his Properties. Black pool was of value for the fishing, the weir and the Ford for crossing the river. A deed of 1573 mentions 2 grist and 2 fulling mills in this area but it is not certain that there was a mill at Blackpool at that date. Another document dated 1587 refers to tolls of Caneston Mill for grinding.

At the end of the 18th century, we find Nathaniel Phillips receiving 10 shillings for every sloop and 5 shillings for every lighter on account of navigation and wharfage for loading and discharging at Blackpool.

The Fishing.

The river abounded in fish and the fishing was a valuable asset. In 1760 Robert Morgan leased the fishing rights from Canaston Bridge to Blackpool for £16 16s. 0d. There was a weir built of piles filled with large stones and rubbish and with strong wattling in five or six tiers about a quarter of a mile upstream from Blackpool. It was rebuilt in about 1846 in solid stone.

People used to come out on Sundays to watch the Salmon jump the weir and it was not unusual in the 1850's. to see Salmon of 7 lbs. or over and sewin of 2 to 3 lbs. go over the top.

The Mill lead was, a favourite place for catching fish and people used to fill their baskets with little Salmon known as "shed". Near the weir there was a fish trap known as the "Slaughter" and as many as 40 or 60 sewin were caught at a time here.

Not unnaturally, this abundance of fish encouraged poaching which was carried out extensively, but matters came to a head in 1830 then there was a violent clash at Blackpool between the Poachers and the men of Baron de Rutzen. The Baron had previously taken to court two Llewellyns who questioned the right of the Baroness to the fishing. Magistrates let them off with a warning against further poaching.

Some time later the Baron was warned that poachers were planning to net the river on a certain night. So his Agent, William Currie, collected twenty men and they watched the river. In due course John & Isaac Llewellyn were spotted coming downstream in a coracle and netting the drawpool between Blackpool and the weir. Currie asked them to stop several times but they refused to take any notice. So two of Currie's men seized the coracles and pulled them ashore. One of Llewellyn's shouted Murder and immediately squibs were fired from the lime kiln and horns were sounded in the wood.

As the coracles were being carried to the bridge, a large party of men, some armed with sticks, set upon Currie's men. In the ensuing fight six of Currie's men were beaten and two seriously injured. Currie himself only just escaped, pursued by several men.

The Llewellyns were subsequently taken to Court where they pleaded guilty on the understanding that they would not be indicted providing the offense was not repeated.

On another more recent occasion it was discovered that a grating had been ingeniously rigged up at the bottom of the opening of the lower waste water sluice of the Mill. When the fish hit the grating they fell back into a basket. Eventually, to put an end to this type of poaching, the gates of the Mill lead were blown up in 1954 and water power was replaced by electricity.

There were ten flood gates altogether, one by the Mill, two further up called the Jackses, six more by the weir and the "old sluice". At flood times, the sluice gate at the "slaughter" by the weir was opened first and the mill gate last. Today there is very little water in the mill lead and the fishing in the river is let to a local syndicate.

The Iron Forge.

At the beginning of the 16th century or possibly even earlier an iron forge was set up at Blackpool. The site was chosen because of the abundant local supply of timber and anthracite and good access to the sea. It was let in 1635 by the Barlows to George Mynns of Woodcote in Surrey and there are records of the sale of coal-pit timber at that time.

In 1709 George Harcourt made a proposal to change the forge into a furnace but we hear no more of the ironworks until 1760 when it was let to an iron maker called Robert Morgan. With the death of John Morgan in 1805, the lease came to an end.

His sons Charles and John wanted to continue and proposed to erect a pair of cylinders to blow three fires and to apply for an Act of Parliament to take off the duty on pit coal which they to use rather than charcoal.

However, trade was poor and by March 1806 they had made little iron owing to the scarcity of charcoal and inadequate supplies of timber. The forge needed 6 to 700 loads of summer and winter wood. Furthermore, great advances were being made in ironmaking in Manchester and they were facing stiff competition. Coal had risen 300 per cent in price, the cost of labour and cordwood had also risen and the supply of the latter was less sure. It was difficult to keep the forge supplied owing to the uncertainty of navigation due to the tides.

The Morgans refused to agree a higher rent and quit the forge in 1806 taking with them most of the equipment, the anvil block, the cast iron hammer wheel, the namer, beam, gudgeon and rings. Their lease for £52 12. 6d. had included the forge, shed, Coke house, Coke oven, stable, iron house, seven cottages, carpenter's shop, flood gates and Locks.

The Mill.

The iron forge was replaced in 1813 by the existing mill which was built by Nathaniel, the son of Nathaniel Phillips. He erected "a large grist mill and over that river a commodious and ornamental bridge which was so placed to unite two roads which had long existed."

In 1833 the mill was insured for £1,300 at a premium of £14 18s. 0d. as follows:

Cornmill including grinding stones £700

Machinery including water wheel £300

Storehouses, stables and pigsties £100

(adjoining but detached)

Dwelling house and of offices near £200

In 1842 John Butler became the tenant at a rent of £194. Two years later he was complaining of a broken beam and the need for a new pit and wheel. The wheel had broken as a result of a jar which occurred at every turn of the wheel and caused the beam to break. The following autumn the flood gates were destroyed by the Rebeccades, followers of Rebecca. This movement was responsible for destroying toll gates, weirs, etc., in protest against social and economic conditions during the period 1839-1842.

By the end of the 19th century the mill machinery was badly in need of repair and an estimate was prepared by the tenant Wyndham Pike in 1897 of the work involved. In 1901 the firm of Joseph J. Armfield of Ringwood in Hampshire was called in and produced a report with their recommendations. The water wheel was 15ft. in diameter and 1ft. 9ins. wide; it had four sets of wooden arms and cast iron arm bosses secured to an 8in. square wrought iron shaft. The wheel was past repair and was of a very old type which was very wasteful of water. The pit wheel was 9 feet in diameter. Both wheels were in a poor state with the teeth badly worn.

There were four pairs of millstones working, two for barley, one for maize and one for wheat; some of the equipment including the stone spindles, the flytackle and the hoist needed replacing. The building itself was in very good repair.

The fall of the water was 13ft 6ins when the tide was out and 3 to 4ft. when it was in.

As a result of Armfield's recommendations, the mill was equipped the same year with a 25in. double horizontal British Empire Turbine. This turbine would work at 32 hp. with a 13 foot fall and at 5 hp. with 4 foot fall. It would also work in tail water which the old wheel would not do. Owing to its high speed, the old heavy gearing would be replaced by high speed gearing which required less power and would greatly reduce wear and tear.

Among the other new equipment that was supplied were four sets of millstone burstings, one set of 3 self-emptying bins, a complete exhaust system and a single chain sack hoist. The cost was £604. Minor repairs were also carried out to the mill lead.

G. W. Pike was granted a lease in 1903 but by 1913 he was in financial trouble. He had spent £123 14s. 6d. on equipment which included a pair of millstones to replace one of the four original pairs which had split, a weighbridge, a cake crusher, a saw bench and corn rolls - the latter were required because customers were going elsewhere to get their oats rolled. Pike asked the Baron de Rutzen for help to re-equip and repair; in particular the flour machine, installed in about 1855 had broken down.

In 1915, repairs were carried out to the mill lead and new hatches were installed. Additional equipment consisting of a Sour dressing plant with automatic feeder, stone metal scalper and centrifugal dressing machine, was also introduced by Joseph J. Armfield & Co. There were four pairs of stones for grinding wheat, one pair for grinding barley, one for shelling oats and one for the manufacture of pearl barley. The mill had a kiln.

Pike reported that "wheat grinding is the mainstay as oil engines and crushers for barley and oats are taking the place of country mills. Blackpool is the only mill for miles around for wheat grinding and making flour."

Pike ran the mill successfully during the first World War and also derived an income from loading timber from the wharf. In 1919 he was earning 2d. a ton for 527 tons loaded. The same year he sank a new well at Blackpool 19ft. deep for which he charged £11 15s. Od.

Little change occurred in the working of the mill until the Second World War when some of the sieves were removed on orders from the Government to stop flour being illegally produced. The local farmers continued to patronize the mill although it was used more for storage than for grinding. With the introduction of electricity at the mill in 1954, the old machinery became redundant and the mill was used by the tenant, Mr. Williams, for grinding and storing corn. In 1968 the late Lady Victoria Dashwood embarked on a programme of restoration of Blackpool Mill which had been rebuilt in 1813 by her ancestor Nathaniel Phillips. The Mill was part of the Slebech Estate and had passed to her following the death of her father John, Baron de Rutzen, whilst serving with the Welsh Guards in Italy in 1944. Extensive repairs were made not only to the Mill itself but also to the corn milling machines, and the water powered turbine that drove it, and an attractive cafe was created at one end of the Mill.

2017 May A grant has been obtained for the refurbishment of the mill

Bletherston, a parish in the hundred of Dungledy county of Pembroke, South Wales, 7 miles (North west by North) from Narberth, containing 300 inhabitants. The living is a consolidated vicarage with LLawhaden, in the archdeaconry and diocese of St Davids. Several silver coins were found here about ten years ago, but they were immediately sold at Haverfordwest, and smelted; so that nothing is known of their date or history. There is an estate in this parish, called Langridge, which belongs to the Bishop of St Davids. The average annual expenditure for the support of the poor is £133. 16.

This Church has been annexed perhaps from its foundation, to the important neighbouring parish Church of Lawhaden. At the present it is a double chambered edifice of which the southern body is earlier. It has been very thoroughly renovated in 1886-89. the entire structure is 35ft long with a breadth of 11ft to the southern chamber and 14 ft to the northern. The chancel is on the north side, divided from the nave by a modern arch. Between the two chambers is an arcade of three bays, the piers being without capitals. The west gable of the nave is crowned with a small Bell cote supported on three plain corbels and in the north aisle is a blocked door with a rounded head. The entrance is now by a door in the south wall opening from a modern porch. All the windows are modern; that to the south chamber is so covered with ivy as to hide all datable details. In the north wall of the chancel is an Easter sepulchre or empty tomb recess. The font bowl is in shape a irregular pentagon, its sides externally being 18, 16 ½, 16, 14 ½ and 14 ½ inches and its depth 11 inches; it appears to be of 13th Century date and is probably coeval with the foundation of the Church.

The triangular shaped churchyard is surrounded by a deep fosse cut in the rock through which the road is carried. A spring to the north of the Church is said locally to be a holy well from which water for baptisms used to be taken – visited 11th June 1915

There is an Easter Sepulchre in the chancel north wall. Much of the walling may be 13c like the pentagonal font, but the west doorway and the south aisle with a doorway and three bay arcade are early 16C.

Bletherston —This parish retains its Elizabethan Chalice and Paten Cover. Both pieces bear the single Mark ^^. the same as that at Amroth. The Bletherston chalice, however, is an exceptional cup, as it varies in decoration from all the others done by this maker. Instead of two bands round the bowl there is here only one, close up to the lip. Within it is the inscription "+ POCVLVM ECLESIE DE Bletherston." It carries the usual two bands of vertical line moulding, The Paten cover which is quite plain,.

The State of Education in Wales 1847 Parish of Bletherston

There is no school of any description, either day or Sunday, held in the above parish. There had been a Sunday School there a little time previous, held in the Church but the attendance was so bad it that it was abandoned. About twelve months ago a person started a day school, but the number in attendance was insufficient to support a master and so he left the place. The children who attend a day school from the parish go either to New moat or Lawhaden. The rate of wages in this parish is the same as at Lawhaden, 6d to 8d a day with food or from 9d to 1s 4d without. The condition of the people is poor, and their character sober. This is a fine earthwork. The knowledge of its existence is due to the record in the Tithe Schedule of the field name, Parc y Garn[?gaer]. It is not marked on the Ordinance sheet and has also escaped the Pembrokeshire Archaeological Survey Committee. The camp is of the promontory fort type, a small tongue of land being cut off by a strong earthen rampart having a gentle outward curve. This rampart 200 ft in length, is from 8 to 10 feet above the interior, and about 15ft above the ground in front dropping to a shallow ditch now considerably filled in by cultivation; the depth thus enclosed is about 250ft. The point is somewhat clubbed and falls off sharply all round especially to the west, on which side flows Rhyd Brown brook. The entrance at the western end of the rampart has a space of 15ft between the edge of the slope and the bank. There are signs of scarping on the slope to the south. Close to the east end of the Rampart is a strong spring ---visited 11th June 1915.

Castell y Fran

This earthwork called a "Tumulus" on the Ordnance sheet is a mount Castle of well recognised type. It stands on a field known as Parc Castell about 500 yards east by south of the hamlet of Penffordd, and on the farm of Castell y fran (Crow Castle) The mound rises about 15ft above the surrounding level, and is of about 200ft circumference at the base. The summit 23 ft in diameter, is slightly depressed in the centre. The ditch has almost disappeared, and there are no traces of a Bailey. The mound stands on the highest point of the district 355 ft above sea level, and commands an extensive view -- Visited 7th October 1914.

A mound, once thought to be ditched, 21m in diameter and 2.5m high, has been rejected as a motte and is thought unlikely to be a sepulchral mound: classified rather as a mill-mound.

Bosheston,

A neat little village near the south coast of the Castlemartin Peninsula. The parish churchyard has a 14th century Cross bearing the head of Christ at the intersection. Nearby features of interest include the popular Bosherston Lily Ponds, St. Govan's Chapel, and the delightful Broad Haven (South) beach.

1938 approximately 1/4 of the parish was acquired by what is now the Ministry of Defence as part of the Castlemartin Range

Topographical Dictionary 1839 Lewis Bosheston

Bosherston, a parish, in the hundred of Castlemartin, union and county of Pembroke, South Wales, 6 miles (S. by W.) from Pembroke; containing 225 inhabitants. This parish is situated on the shore of the Bristol Channel, by which it is bounded on the south; and the rocks on this part of the coast are worn, by the repeated action of the sea, into caverns of considerable depth, and of singular and romantic appearance. Of these, Bosherston Meer, extending about a quarter of a mile from the sea, is the most remarkable: at the entrance it presents only a small opening on the surface of the ground, but gradually it expands into a spacious cavern of increasing depth, which has never yet been explored. Previously to the commencement of a storm, the confined air is much agitated, and the most terrific noises issue from the cleft, which are heard at a great distance: during the violence of the tempest immense columns of spray are occasionally thrown up. The Stack Rocks, on the coast, are frequented in summer by innumerable sea-birds of various tribes. By far the greater part of the land in the parish is enclosed and in a state of cultivation, but there is a considerable expanse of open downs.

The living is a rectory, rated in the King's Books at £11. 6. 8.; patron, Earl Cawdor: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £110. 10., and there is a glebe of sixty-five acres, valued at £62. 10. per annum; also a glebe-house. The Church, dedicated to St. Michael, was handsomely ornamented by John Campbell, esq., a member of the Cawdor family. The children in the parish have access to a day school in Stackpool-Elidur, supported by Earl Cawdor.

A little to the east of Bosherston Meer, and also within the parish, is the hermitage of St. Gawen, situated in a fissure of the rock apparently formed by some violent convulsion, about half-way in the cliff between the summit and the base, and only a short distance from high-water Mark. A flight of steps, rudely cut in the rock, forms a descent to a "Chapel," about twenty feet in length and twelve feet wide, with an altar formed of a coarse stone slab, harmonizing with the rude and simple character of the place. On one side a door, opening from the Chapel, leads into a small cell, cut in the solid rock, and in form resembling the human body, which is said to have been the solitary retreat of St. Gawen. Beneath the hermitage is St. Gawen's well, held in great repute for the miraculous efficacy in the cure of diseases superstitiously ascribed to it. The scenery around this sequestered spot is of the wildest and most romantic character: large fragments of rock are scattered in confused heaps in every direction, and huge masses of rugged cliffs, threatening to detach themselves every moment from the higher precipices, which impend over the seaworn base of the rock, give to the scene an appalling grandeur of effect. Gawen, from whom the promontory of St. Gawen's Head derives its name, though now popularly regarded as a saint and an anchorite, is said to have been a nephew of the renowned King Arthur, and one of the knights of his round Table; and Hoole, in one of the notes attached to his translation of Orlando Furioso, asserts that on "a breach of the sea, near Milford Haven, is a natural rock, shaped into a Chapel, which tradition reports to have been the burying-place of Sir Gawain, King Arthur's nephew."

The Parish Church Ded: St. Michael.

Church late 13c. Probably built on the site of an earlier Church.

This cruciform buildings known in 1488 as ' the Church of Stackpole Boshier " consists of chancel (21 1/2 feet by 13 feet), nave (32 1/2 feet by 18 feet), north transept (12 feet by 9 feet), west tower (16 feet square), and south porch. In the latter half of the 19th The Church was restored in 1855 when the Norman windows where replaced by the present Gothic style and much other restoration was done, including a new chancel arch and roof In the south-east angle of the chancel are a plain double piscina and an aumbry; in the south-west angle is a squint. On either side of the chancel arch are two corbels which supported the rood beam. The transepts and nave are vaulted, both transepts opening to the nave with plain pointed arches. The tower is of three storeys, and finished with battlements above a corbel table; at its south-eastern corner is an unlighted vice of seventy-six stairs. A stone bench, which in the year 1850 ran round the tower, has been removed. The three floors are lighted by plain slits. The font has been scraped and altered; it was apparently of the square Norman type commonly found in the county. The Norman font has been lined with lead and provided with an oak lid.

1872 three light stained glass window by Clayton and Bell depicting life of Christ dedicated to rector for 41years- were erected

Two interesting female effigies are illustrated and fully described in Arch.Camb. (1909 VI, ix,345). They appear to be of 14th-century date. —one is hidden by pews - one of the Dowager Duchess of Buckingham one of a crusader

The south transept has a squint and contains a crudely made figure, whilst the north transept contains an effigy of a veiled lady with a dog at her feet. Both transepts have 14c ogival headed piscina and pointed tunnel-vaults like that of the probably slightly earlier nave. There are corbels for a rood beam across the chancel arch but the arch itself has been renewed. The west tower has a round arched vault.

The Church was extensively restored in 1855 along with the other Churches on his estate. by John Frederick Campbell, first Earl of Cawdor. the big local landowner at the time, then living at Stackpole Court Its old high backed pews have disappeared and its Norman windows have been replaced by those of later Gothic design. The Cawdor arms may be seen in the tiling of the Chancel and Sanctuary floor.

The East Window

This lovely window of nine lights. Depicting the Annunciation. the Nativity; the Baptism; the Agony in the Garden; the Crucifixion; the Burial;. the Resurrection; the Ascension; and Pentecost; was erected in memory of the Rev d William Allen. Rector 1831-1872.

The Diary of William's wife Frances, was discovered recently covering the period from 1832 to 1865 it furnishes a fascinating picture of country Clergy life in South Pembrokeshire in the early 19th. Century.

The transept Windows

These four lights are erected in memory of another incumbent of Bosherton the Ven, David Edward William's (1913-1920), who was Archdeacon of St Davids (1900- 1920), and it is interesting to note the choice of lights, In the South Transept they depict St. Teilo, the Rector's favourite saint, and St. Govan, the local saint, surmounted by the Arms of Exeter College, Oxford, where the Rector was educated. The North Transept lights show St. Michael, the dedication of the Church, and St David, the Diocesan patron saint, surmounted by the Arms of St David and the Diocese of St Davids.

The Squint Window and the west Window

These were erected by a schoolmistress who taught for many years in the old Bosherston School (now the Church Hall). The Squint window depicts St. Nicholas as the patron saint of seafarers, and is in memory of Petty Officer George Evans, her husband, who was killed in the battle of Jutland. The west Window is a depiction of Jesus, The Resurrection and the Life, and was erected in memory of her father. James Walter Davies of Pembroke Dock.

Tombs

Under the North Transept window there is what is thought to be the tomb of a Dowager Duchess of Buckingham, an antecedent of the Duke of Norfolk. The fact that she was a widow maybe gathered from the veil and cloak shown on the figure carved on the tomb. That she was of noble birth can be seen by the coronet on her head and the dog at her feet. Under the South Transept window there is a stone tomb surmounted by a figure depicting a Crusader. It is thought to have been carved in the 14th. Century

War Memorial

On the North wall of the Church there are brass tablets commemorating the men of the Parish who lost their lives in the First World War and a coast guard killed on duty in the Second.

Other Memorials

On the Nave walls are two stone tablets placed in memory of local families and near the Organ there is a framed vellum inscription stating that when electricity was installed in the Church in 1958 each light was dedicated in memory, of some local individual. The Church was rewired and new lighting installed in 1987

The Church was completely re-roofed in 1991- 1992.

Churchyard Cross.

This stands to the south of the Church. From a base of three steps rises a plain octagonal shaft 56 inches in height. At the intersection of the arms is a much-weathered face of the Saviour in high relief (Arch. Camb. 861, III, vii, 218, ill.). It is probably of 14th-century date.—Visited, 14th June, 1920.

Glynne, Notes (Arch. Camb., 1888, V, v, 124).

The old Cross in the Churchyard is believed to be part of a stone crucifix destroyed during the Dissolution of the Monasteries, found by local people, it was then placed on a pillar probable to serve as a preaching cross. - face of Christ carved on west side.

The Preaching Cross

Outside the Church.

Erected on a two-tier throne there is an unusual Preaching Cross - unusual in that it has an unnaturally short upright, and that it has a face carved on the centre of the cross. It has been suggested that originally there was a full stone crucifix which was mutilated and partly destroyed, perhaps during the Reformation, and that local folk found the cross but being unable to find its stem, placed the cross on a simple upright of locally-hewn stone, and erected it to serve as a Preaching Cross.

St Govan's Head, Bosherston

St Govan's Head is on the south coast of the Castlemartin Peninsula, in the Pembrokeshire Coast National Park, 2km south-east of Bosherston. This part of the coastline is within the Royal Artillery Corps Castlemartin Range. It is a headland of vertical limestone cliffs. The peninsula is a flat plateau consisting of Carboniferous limestone rock, about 350 million years old. The plateau was formed by marine erosion when the sea level was much higher than today, then lifted up by movements of the Earth's crust about 50 million years ago. The 13th century St Govan's Chapel is tucked into a cleft at the foot of the cliffs, and below it St Govan's Well .

St. Govan's Chapel and Well 1923 RCAM

At a distance of one mile and a quarter south of the parish Church and concealed in a rocky gorge on the sea coast stands the small well-Chapel of St Govan. The descent to it from Trevalen Downs is by a flight of fifty-two rude stone steps. The building is in a fairly good state of preservation. It consists of a single chamber 18 ft by 12 ft having a plain pointed vault covered externally with rude tiles. At the west end is a single empty Bell-cote. The main entrance is to the north through a pointed doorway 60 inches high to the lintel and 30 inches broad. A second door in the north east angle six steps above the level of the interior gives access to a natural rock chamber of very small dimensions, whilst a third doorway in the south west angle leads to the well on the cliff a few yards below the Chapel. At the east end of the main structure is a stone altar 72 in by 21 in by 3 in with a height of 33 in. having above it a simple slit for light. A stone masonry bench runs along the north and south sides with a return in the south east corner to the altar. To the left of the main entrance on the wall is a square stoup in the south wall is an aumbry and between it and south east angle is an opening 20 in by 12 in inside. Opposite to the main entrance is another light. In the west wall under the Bell-cote is also a narrow slit; below it the natural rock forms part of the walling.

The present floor is of clay, which may possibly cover one of rough stone slabs, its level is three steps below the exterior at the north doorway. Beneath the stoup is a small spring of fresh water which is said never to flow over the floor of the Chapel. The building may be of 13th-century date. The Well, which lies between the Chapel and the sea, is protected by a plain hood of masonry; the entrance is to the north. 'The spring has been dry for some years past. Fenton (415) notes that in it ' crippled patients bathe their limbs, many of whom come from the remotest parts of the principality to seek relief here and leave their crutches behind, a votive offering on the altar, as I perceived placed there when I last paid a visit to this hermitage.'—Visited, 14th June, 1929.

Bosheston Mere

This is a very curious blow-hole on the cliffs near Stackpole, not far from St. Govan's Chapel, the quaint little hermitage nestling halfway down the great limestone cliffs and said to have been the final refuge of Sir Gawain, one of Arthur's Knights of the round Table, who thus at the end of his life became Saint Gawain, or Govan. This blow-hole is connected underground with the sea-caves, and at certain states of wind and tide the sea, dashing into the caves and imprisoning the air, forces it up through the narrow passage and out through the blow-hole with a shrill and terrific sound, like a prolonged scream or whistle, the edges of the hole being polished like marble by the friction of small stones and earth, carried up by the rush of wind. The mere is said to ' play ' when the sound is heard, but this happens now more seldom than formerly, though persons now living have heard it frequently possibly some fall of rock may have obstructed, or partially obstructed, the passage.

Camden, in his ' Britannia ' (Page 640), thus alludes to it, though in rather a sceptical spirit: ' Near Stackpole Boshier, otherwise Boshierston, upon the sea-side, is a pool or pit called- Boshierston-Mear; the depth whereof several that have sounded have not yet discovered. This pit bubbles and foams, and makes such a noise before stormy weather that it is heard above ten miles off. The banks are of no great circumference at the top, but broader downwards, and from the bottom there is a great breach towards the sea, which is about a Furlong distant. But there is much more talked of this place than I shall trouble you with at present, because I take some relations of it for fabulous . . . its noise is distinctly known from that of the sea, which also on these coasts often roars very loud.'

The opening of the blow-hole is round, and about of the size through which a man could with difficulty squeeze himself. The author has never heard the mere actually ' play,' but has stood by when it gave an occasional deep, hollow groan; the Crush of wind through the hole was tremendous, and one seemed to hear it coming from a long way off before it actually rushed out, then for an interval all would be still then the groan again and then the wind

STONE-AXE FOUND NEAR Pembroke.—This beautiful, finely ground and polished, stone-axe was found by Mr. William Jones, on the 4th October, 1929, in the earth at the entrance to a rabbits hole, in the east hedge 500 yards along the lane leading to Trevallen farm, from the junction of that lane and the road leading to St. Govan's, in the parish of Bosheston, 5 miles south of Pembroke. The axe is 6 ins. in length and 3 ins. in width above the cutting edge. The maximum thickness is 1 1/2 ins. The cutting edge is crescent-shaped and in perfect condition. The butt-end, however, is not worked so perfectly. The stone is felsite, of a dull yellowish colour.

The axe is at present at Bosherston, in the possession of the finder.

Freyneslake Tumulus

This is a ruined sepulchral mound on Bosherston Burrows immediately south of North Hill In 1880 it was carefully trenched, and found to be constructed of stones and sand, and to cover a Kist containing two skeletons. One of the skulls, now in the Tenby Museum, was described by the late Professor Rolleston as " the beautifully typical brachycaphalic skull of a young female." With it were; pig. sheep or goat bones, white water-worn pebbles, and fragments of well-baked black ware (Laws, Little England, 29). The mound has a present height of 5 feet, and a base circumference of 140 feet.—RCAM Visited, 14th June, 1922.

Buckspool Down Fort

A well-preserved promontory fortress south of Buckspool Down. The defences consist of a rampart and a shallow ditch about 200 feet in length thrown across a neck of land which falls on either side by inaccessible cliffs to the sea. The rampart rises some 6 feet from the level and drops 8 feet to the ditch; though somewhat weathered it is in good preservation. The entrance is from the north-east.—Visited, 14th June, 1922.

Fishpond Camp

Fenton (tour, 419), referring to this camp states that " , in one of the ditches of which, by a labourer raising a hedge was dug up half a skeleton, the upper part with a sort of brazen ring on his breast, perhaps a rude broach."

This is doubtless the large earthwork, 400 feet long by 250 feet broad, known as the Fishpond. The defence to the east is by steep slopes, the fall to the west has been artificially sharpened, while the exposed front to the north has two ramparts, the inner much denuded, the outer about 80 yards beyond, with the remains of a ditch. The entrance was in the north angle. The enclosed area is level and strewn with loose boulders. Lieut.-Colonel W. Morgan, R.E., F. S. A. an ex-Commissioner, points out that "from beings situate on the sea this earthwork is generally described as a cliff Castle, but the amount of protection it derives from it is but small. For this reason it is a very unlikely situation for the natives to select as a refuge, and a most suitable one for invaders."—Visited, 14th June, 1922.

Bosherston Camp; Fishpond Camp

Bosherston Camp is a sub-rectangular inland promontory enclosure, crowning a ridge set between flooded inlets. The 'fish pond'; the enclosed area, about 108m by 98m, is defined by a triple bank system facing west towards the approach along the promontory ridge, the circuit resting on possibly enhanced natural scarp lines elsewhere; a shell-midden deposit within an angle of ditch produced what is thought to be an early Iron Age pin, whilst a small

Bosherston Windmill,

To the south of Bosherston village, on the crest of a low summit at 41m above sea level, are the badly-ruined remains of what appears to be a windmill tower. The stone rubble-built tower is circular in plan, roughly 4m in diameter, with parallel sides, and stands about 5m high. The facing stonework has been removed from the lower 2m and about a third of the stone wall has been removed from the north side, leaving the structure in a parlous state. The tower is not shown on any Ordnance Survey mapping despite its size and prominent location.

Style; Styll;Styles, Bosherston

Early 18th century, altered, early East wing, 2 storey, rubble, recessed sashes, 6 panel entrance door, hewn beams, purlins, trusses.

RCAHMW, 1993.

Style is situated towards the northern end of Bosherston, on the north side of the minor road through the village, and immediately west of the churchyard. Style was the farmhouse of a tenancy of about 89.1 hectares under the Earl of Cawdor, tenanted by R Hitchings in 1782, and J Benyon in 1839. It is a house of two periods, facing south. The older part is the east unit, with originally opposed doorways and a very large chimney (possibly still older) standing out from the gable wall, the upper part of the stack being about 0.3 m away from the main gable. It is built of rubble masonry. It has two ovens, one at the rear, and one at the side of the hearth, with slate coverings to the ovens and chimney offsets. It has been called a 'Flemish' chimney and there were once a number of examples of these huge square chimneys in Pembrokeshire. There is also an ordinary end-chimney centrally at the apex of the same gable. The east side has altered windows as in the later house and a cobbled front yard. To this original house, after demolition of its west part, a double-fronted, three window range house, of the late 18th century, was added. It has a central panelled door with a canopy on brackets, and six-pane sash windows of small size, and recessed. The whole of the front is hung with small slates. Elsewhere the building has painted rubble masonry. It has a slate roof and an end chimney at the west end. There are some floor beams with plain stops to the chamfers. The central unit of the later house is occupied by stairs and a small rear cellar. At the rear, for the full length of the later house, a two-storey extension under a lean-to roof is present. The old part of the house probably took the place of a back-kitchen in relation to the new house. It has a low wall to the front garden in rubble masonry, with a mounting block at the left of the gate.

Trevallen;Trevalen;Trefalen, Bosherston

16th -17th century end chimney house, much modernised. Fine square Pembrokeshire chimney. RCAHMW, 1993.

Trevallen is situated just to the south of the minor road from Bosherston to Broadhaven carpark, about 1km south-east of the village. The farmhouse was one of the tenancies on the Stackpole Estate. It is believed to have been in the Lloyd family tenancy from mid-18th century until c.1870. The Thomas family were tenants until 1937, and Mr Davies until 1995. It has an 18th/19th century frontage, possibly to enhance an earlier structure. It is a two storey, three-window range house facing west, which is symmetrically doubled-fronted with a central (modern) door and restored six-pane sash windows. There is a small end-chimney at the north, with a single storey lean-to dairy with a barred and shuttered window. The house also has a large two-storey rear (east) wing under a roof at a lower level, containing the back kitchen and a large end-chimney. There are other lean-to rooms at the east of the main range and north of the rear wing, probably all of same period. At the south end of the main range is an exceptionally large kitchen, with several offsets, rising to a square stack. This chimney projects out about 2m and is about 4m wide. A side flue from a former boiler enters at one side. Around it an outhouse has been added in rubble masonry, which was evidently a brewhouse or wash-house, and the upper floor may have been sleeping accommodation for the farm servants, with a sheeted roof. It was listed as a well-designed farmhouse with two exceptionally large chimneys.

Thornston, Bosherston

Thornston is situated at the southern edge of Bosherston, on the east side of the minor road to St. Govan's Head. In the 1970s, when it was visited, it still took the form of an 18th century, 2 storey building, built of rubble with a south wing. It had recessed casements, glazing bars, a plain central entrance and has a modern porch on the north-west side. The main feature of the house was an extremely large, square chimney, of which there were once a number of examples in Pembrokeshire. Central to this was a very large oven extension, with a slate conical roof. Thornston appears to have been extensively modernised, as the 2000 OS Landline 1:2500 map indicates that the site plan is now a regular rectangle, as opposed to the irregular shape indicated by drawings of the building and the previous OS 25" to the mile maps of 1908 and previously.

Church Cottage, Bosherston

Church Cottage was on the eastern edge of Bosherston, on the west side of Windsor road. It was a rubble stone built cottage of a T-shaped plan. It was single storey, with a pitched slate roof. There was a large chimney with an oven with a conical, slate roof on the northern end of the building, and another large chimney on the south-eastern end, with a hipped-slate roof. Internal dividing walls were timber framed with a rubble stone infill. The cottage was demolished in November 1984.

Dover, Bosherston

Dover cottage is situated at the southern end of Bosherston on the east side of the minor road towards Star Rock, just south of the T-junction minor roads. In the early 1970s, when it was visited, the main feature of the house was an extremely large, square lateral chimney, of which there were once a number of examples in Pembrokeshire. To the side of this was a very large rounded oven extension, with a slate roof. The building is of rubble stone, rendered and whitewashed. It is 1.5 storeys with a pitched slate roof and dormer windows in the roof space on the north-west elevation, plus a small lean-to extension. To the south-east elevation there is doorway with a small porch and three windows. There is also a secondary chimney, central to the building, of regular dimensions. Crickmail, Bosherston Crickmail was situated on Crickmail Down, on the Royal Artillery Corps Castlemartin Range, 1.3km west of Bosherton. It was an large open complex of farm buildings, with the main farmhouse possibly separated and slightly to the south. This was a 3 storey Georgian building. The farm complex dates from at least the first half of the nineteenth century, as it appears on the 1865 OS 1st edition 25' to the mile map. All of the buildings appear to have been destroyed after the Range was built in 1939. The 1948 6' to the mile map shows no trace of the buildings, and the 2000 OS Landline 1:2500 map also shows an empty field at this location.

Boulston,

on eastern banks of the western Cleddau just opposite Hook

Topographical Dictionary of Wales S Lewis Boulston, otherwise Bulston 1839

Boulston, otherwise Bulston, a parish, in the union of Haverfordwest, hundred of Dungledy, county of Pembroke, South Wales, 3 miles (S. E. by S.) from Haverfordwest; containing 319 inhabitants. This parish was for many generations the residence of the ancient family of Wogan, by one of whom the Church is supposed to have been built. It is pleasantly situated on the banks of the river Cleddau, and the surrounding scenery, which in some parts is richly wooded, is pleasingly and agreeably diversified.

abounds in the parish, but it has not been worked; and a vein of iron-ore has been discovered, but no preparations for procuring it have been made. The living is a donative; net income, £25; patron and impropiator, Robert Innes Ackland, esq. The Church is an ancient structure, ornamented on the outside, above the chancel window, with the arms of the Wogans, and containing several monuments, among them a very curious effigy. A bequest of £2 per annum to the poor, by James Beynon, in 1781, has been lost.

There are several tumuli in the parish, one of which was opened by Mr. Fenton, in his tour through this county, and found to contain a rudely-formed kist, in which were some human bones half calcined, intermixed with pieces of charcoal. Some remains of the ancient mansion of the Wogans, on the bank of the river, are still preserved, as a picturesque ruin, in the beautiful grounds of an elegant mansion the seat of Mr. Ackland.

Annals and Antiquities Thomas Nicholas 1872

Facing the other Cleddau, and within a short distance of Picton Castle park, is Boulston, formerly the residence of the Wogans, now of the Acklands. The estate was purchased by R. G. Ackland, esq., who built the present mansion on an elevated part of the grounds, on the lower skirts of which, near the river, are the ruins of the ancient abode of the Wogans, and the little Church, a "peculiar" in the gift of the family. There are some elaborate monuments to the Wogans. One of these, to Sir John Wogan, Kt. enumerates six generations of the Wogans living at Boulston, from Sir John Wogan, Kt., of Wiston, downwards. The inscription states that Sir John died A.D. 1616, and yet that he "made and set up" the monument in 1617 clearly implies error in one of the dates. Several memorial tablets to the Acklands also are here.

Nooks And Corners Of Pembrokeshire 1895.

Over the water lies Boulston, where hard by the brink of the stream (perhaps a bow shot east from the desecrated Church) rises a jumble of ivy-clad ruins, backed by a tangled thicket of old forest trees. Here lived the Wogans, a well-known family in days of yore, who adopted a wyvern as their crest from the following tradition.

Amidst the broad- woodlands that formerly extended around the ancestral mansion, wild beasts of various kinds were supposed to roam at large. In the remotest depths of the forest lurked the dreaded basilisk, a formidable monster whose glance caused instant death to the ill-starred wight upon whom its gaze might rest, but which perished itself if first perceived by a man.

At last a certain bold fellow determined to rid the countryside of this objectionable beast. Causing himself to be shut up in a cask and rolled into the forest, he peeped through the bung-hole, and presently spied the basilisk without himself being seen. Thereupon the dreaded monster, giving vent to an unearthly yell that could be heard for miles around, fell down and perished upon the spot, so that the country-folk were no longer troubled by the molestations of the basilisk.

A dragon legend, very similar to the above, is connected with the village of Mordford in Herefordshire.

Adam le Bull. Wogan. Ackland

Boulston, or Bullston, from Adam le Bull, the Norman, now a ruin by the shores of Milford Haven, just where the two branches of the river Cleddau meet (called, in Camden's ' Britannia,' AberDaugleddau, from Gledheu, ancient British for a sword, the ' Water of the Two Swords '), was formerly a seat of the Wogans, a branch of the family established at Wiston. Great woods in those days spread around it, and tradition makes them the haunt of many wild beasts, and chiefly of one called in the old chronicles a ' basilisk,' which slew by sight, and was in its turn slain if first seen. one of the Wogans had himself enclosed in a barrel, and carried into the woods; through a peep-hole in the barrel he saw and slew the monster (spoken of by one old writer as a ' cockatrice '). on some of the old Wogan crests the barrel is still seen.

Colonel Ackland built the modern house; he was a great friend of Fenton's; the old house has been in ruins over two hundred and fifty years.

A Historical Tour through Pembrokeshire Fenton 1811 Bolston Mansion

On the north side of the river , appeared the ruins of the venerable mansion of Bolston or Bullston, the last owners and occupiers of which were Wogans, a branch of the Wiston family, a family that at one period struck its fibres every where through the county.

It stood on the edge of the water, so that the tide washed its walls. From the existing remains it must have been a large house, built, like all the mansions of that date , without any regular plan, augmented at intervals according to any prevailing exigency or increase in family. It was backed with extensive woods, some veterans of noble growth still remaining, which tradition represents as having been of such extent, so tangled and so forestry, that it became the harbour of wild beasts, and was infected by a basilisk, a creature that is fabled to kill if it first sees, or to die instantly if first seen, and that one of the ancient possessors of this place, by a stratagem of enclosing himself in a cask, had himself rolled into the thick of the wood, where, through a hole in the cask, he first espied the monster causing it to perish, and that ever after the family for their crest a wyvern, with the label “gardez vous” issuing from its mouth; nor was the cask entirely forgotten, as I have seen a punning crest of one of the possessors of this house, Sir John Wogan, on a seal to a deed, being a Bull passant on a ton, making out the name of the place, and on a stone above the chancel window of the Church of Bolston observed the Wogan arms with the addition of three casks (for perhaps the knight of the basilisk for greater security was cased in threefold mail of cask); but whether the strange tale of the cask and cockatrice gave birth to this variation in the family heraldry, or pure love of punning, I cannot say, though I am inclined to think that the place was more likely to have taken its name from a man of great command in those parts Adam le Bull, who gave Clarbeston to the Commandery of Slebech.

The old mansion had been uninhabited for one hundred and fifty years, and the last branch of the Wogans of that house had settled in Norfolk. Their estate in this country, which was considerable and well circumstanced, had been long offered to sale, and owing to some suspicion of defect in the title long blown on. It was at last purchased by Colonel Ackland who built a handsome modern house about half a mile from the site of the old one, on an elevated part of the demesne, with the ground finely sloping from it in a lawn to the river leaving the prospect open towards Haverfordwest, and screened from the other side by the venerable remains of old forest, admitting through trees a peep of the picturesque fragments of Old Bolston. It commands a most lovely view of the river and the opposite woods of Little Milford a scene endlessly diversified by the navigation up and down. The demesne of Bolston is very spacious and nearly insulated, is a manor, including the whole parish, with no intervening Properties.

It would be difficult to have fixed on a spot involving in so many ingredients of beauty, consequence and comfort as Bolston or where they are turned to more account. It has every component part of a fine landscape and a fine form, possessing lime, coal, and a tractable soil, in a most enviable neighbourhood, on a navigable river, and about three miles only from the opulent Market and post town of Haverfordwest, nor would the recorded hospitality of the old, the theme of the bards, suffer any disparagement by comparison with that of the new.

Boulston Manor 1921 RCAM

Of the home of the Wogan family on the north bank of the western Cleddau, nothing now remains beyond a few fragments of ivy clad walls. Part of the residence was of three storeys, and there were large cellars. It had been uninhabited for 150 years when Fenton described it as ‘a large house built like all mansions of that date without any regular plan, augmented at intervals according to any prevailing exigency or increase of family’

The present Boulston mansion was erected in 1798 on higher ground a little to the north of the old residence – Visited 12th May 1921

Boulston

Manor was built in 1798. It is a cement rendered two storey building and the central part has Venetian windows and a balcony. There are four Doric columns to the portico and wrought iron railings. RCAHMW

Acc to Medieval Buildings - published by Preseli District Council

Great ruined mansion, massive and overgrown both inaccessible and difficult to interpret. The river gateways are still clearly defined whilst remains of stone mullions are visible on the highest section of wall remaining. Was once the home of the Wogan family one of Pembrokeshires most important until their downfall at the time of the Restoration and the ruins despite their astonishingly damp situation indicate that originally this was almost a small castle formed by two adjacent towers rather than a purely domestic structure - just upstream is the ruined Church

Boulston Manor Ruins A few fragments of ivy clad walls survive of a three storey Elizabethan mansion with large cellars. It was unoccupied for 150 years when Fenton saw it in 1811.

The Elizabethan dating is suggested by the size of the house and by a mullion fragment. The garden is still of importance due to the survival of a walled garden of four compartments, one possibly an entrance court to a 'Tudor' garden. Its most significant feature is a substantial long walled terrace over 70 metres long overlooking the western Cleddau estuary. There are also fish-ponds to the North. The dating is conjectural. Boulston Lodge lies near near Haverfordwest and is now a private house. It is named 'The Lodge' presumably to distinguish it from the much more ancient Manor House The site of the garden is overlain to some extent by post World War II farm buildings. The walled garden in conifer plantations has been used for pheasant rearing but the southern and western walls have mostly collapsed. It is a very wet site with springs and a former well. RCAHWW

The Parish Church of Bolston

1811 A Historical Tour through Pembrokeshire Fenton Bolston Church

The Church has the reputation of being a peculiar, a species of property but little known to the Clergy of this country, being a particular parish having jurisdiction within itself, power to grant administration of wills etc. though I rather think it has no higher claims than to the character of a free Chapel, a place of religious worship exempt from all jurisdiction of the ordinary, save only that the incumbents were generally instituted by the Bishop, and inducted by the archdeacon of the district it lay in. Most of these Chapels were built on the manors and ancient demesnes of the crown whilst in the King's hands, and when the crown parted with those estates the Chapels went along with them, retaining their original privileges and freedom.

The little Church is a very plain structure, and neither externally nor within productive of anything very remarkable but may be made a beautiful object in the landscape when Col Acklands projected improvements shall take place. The monuments, though not very ancient or very splendid, afford curious specimens of that family pride which mixes too ostentatiously perhaps everywhere with the awful memorials of the dead.

Among the lumber in a corner of the Church I could not help remarking a small basso relief of the boy Bishop, well executed, which at one time I presume filled a more honourable and conspicuous station than it does at present, but where no tradition remains to point out.

Boulston , a small Church 3mls South East of Haverfordwest on a tongue of land encircled by the western Cleddau. It preserves within a niche and surmounted by a canopy a curious little figure which Fenton styles the " Boy Bishop", but which is taken by some to represent an acolyte. There was formerly here a mansion of the Wogans.

In the year 1843 this Church was practically rebuilt on its former foundations. It consists of chancel 20 feet by 12 feet and a nave 36ft by 18½ ft. On either side of the chancel is a recess 4ft by 19ft for a tomb of a member of the family of Wogan. A small effigy probably part of the decorative features of a fine tomb which in Fenton's time was `amongst the lumber in the corner of the Church has been placed in a piscina recess in the south wall. The font is modern but an earlier font lies at the west end of the Church Visited 12th May 1921

Despite being heavily restored in 1843 the 13c nave and chancel divided by a plain pointed arch now lie in ruins. They are hidden away in vegetation near the shore far from any road. The recesses in the chancel were for Wogan Family tombs

Boulston Church, the private Church of the Wogan family, was largely abandoned after the Second World War, lying on the banks of the Cleddau it is in a ruinous condition. RCAHMW

Boulston -- Pembrokeshire Parsons

This benefice was formerly a donative but is now a perpetual curacy. It was granted by Wizo the Fleming, who was the founder of Wiston Castle, Pems., and Walter his son and Walter son of Walter, to the Knights of St. John of Jerusalem at Slebech, a grant which was afterwards confirmed by Philip son of Wizo, Bishop Anselm, and other bishops of St David's. The grant included that Church of Boleston with its Chapel of Pike-ton [Picton], and the whole vill of Slebache with the Church, mill, fishery, and lands, and all appurtenances, liberties, &c.—Anselm's Confirm. Chapter.

Boulston Church continued in the appropriation of the Hospital of Slebech until that House was dissolved at the time of Hen. VIII. It was at this date probably that the tithes of the parish got into lay hands. At all events, by 1594 the Church had been purchased by Sir John Wogan.—Owen's Pem.

Lewis Wogan, of Boulston, by his will dated 15 Aug., 1701 and proved at Carmarthen on 29 September.,

1702, bequeathed the tithes of Boulston parish to the minister of Boulston Church. According to Particulars of the Endowments of livings in the Diocese of St David's., by Mr. T. W. Barker, the income of this living appears to consist of the annual sum of £12 charged on the Boulston estate.

The bowl rests on a baluster stem. The dimensions are as follows : height, 6 in. ; diam. of bowl, 3 in. ; depth, 3 in. ; diam. of foot, 3 in.; weight, 4 oz. 15 dwts. — A Plate, Hall-marked 1685, the maker's mark being probably I R ; weight, 13oz. 7dwts. On the rim is engraved a shield of arms with mantling, These are the arms of Wogan . The representative of the Boulston branch in 1685 was Lewis Wogan. For their importance in the county the Wogans of Boulston were hardly second to their kin at Wiston ; they contributed five sheriffs and three Members of Parliament to the county annals, they intermarried with many of the leading families of the county, and they reigned at Boulston from the 15th to the 18th century.

The annals of crime in Pembrokeshire present a some what singular history. For ninety years past not an execution has taken place. The last was one that excited a good deal of sympathy.

Roblin, a man who was found guilty, first of manslaughter, and that verdict being refused by the presiding Judge, afterwards of murder, though it was very generally felt that the first verdict would have satisfied justice, was hanged on Easter Monday 1821. In those days it was a short shrift, as he was only tried on Good Friday. So great was the horror occasioned by this execution, that the hangman was never known.

Slebech Estate and Family Record

Brawdy,

Wales in the Eighteenth Century edited by Donald Moore p.37

Pembrokeshire - small estate of the Jones of Brawdy which came to little more than 2,000 acres at the height of the families prosperity had been held by them since 1448 and was not sold until 1919 having been held by 17 successive generations of the same stock.

South Wales by Wade 1913

Brawdy, a small village in Pembrokeshire 7 miles E of St Davids where there are some inscribed stones. The Church preserves its sanctus Bell-cote, and in the chancel is a small lancet window. The font is Norman. Of the inscribed stones (which have been removed to the churchyard for preservation) one has Vendogni and another Maqui Quagte; whilst a third has Briaci fili. A mound called Poyntz Castle will be found on the road to St Davids. It was doubtless raised to support a small wooden fort.

Topographical Dictionary of Wales 1839 Lewis Brawdy

Brawdy, a parish, in the union of Haverfordwest, hundred of Dewisland, county of Pembroke, South Wales, 7 miles (E.) from St Davids; containing 767 inhabitants. This parish is intersected by the turnpike-road from Haverfordwest to St Davids, and, with the exception of a comparatively small portion, consisting of hills and moors, is inclosed, and in a good state of cultivation. The living is a discharged vicarage, with that of Hayscastle annexed, rated in the King's Books at £3. 18.

9., and endowed with £200 royal bounty, and £1400 parliamentary grant; present net income, £115; patron, the Bishop of St Davids. The impropriate tithes of Brawdy have been commuted for a rent-charge of £293. 15., and the vicarial tithes for a rent-charge of £70. The Church is dedicated to St David. There are places of worship for Presbyterians, Independents, and Calvinistic Methodists. It is related of the Rev. Mr. Wilcocks, the late respected vicar of the parish, that, prior to entering into holy orders, he paid two Masters, during twelve years, out of his earnings by daily labour, to teach all the poor children of Brawdy and Hayscastle; and that the parishioners were so impressed with a sense of his meritorious conduct and love of learning, that he was ordained at their request. He latterly supported a school of forty-five boys and twenty girls. The schools now maintained in the parish are, a Church school; a British school, supported by subscription; and three or four Sunday schools. On Brawdy farm is a rath, or British encampment, defended by a triple rampart.

Brawdy Church and Inscribed Stones Arch Camb 1898- Haverfordwest Meeting.

— There are two distinct types of churches in Pembrokeshire, namely :

(1) those in the southern and English part of the county, distinguished by their high military towers, cavernous interiors with pointed barrel vaulting, and tunnel-like hagiostopes having exterior roofs separate from those of the other parts of the building ; and

(2) those in the northern and Welsh part of the county, which are much smaller and simpler, and have a Bell-gable instead of a tower.

Brawdy Church belongs to the latter class, but it is a good example. There is a Bell-gable at the west end, and a second Bell-cote for the sanctus Bell over the east wall of the nave. The ground plan consists of a nave, chancel, south porch, and a south aisle opening into both the nave and the chancel. When the south aisle was added, instead of making a proper arcade between it and the nave, only a single arch was pierced through the south wall of the nave, and one of the original south windows on the west side of this arch was left as it was, and now looks like a hole knocked in the wall separating the nave from the aisle. The arches are all pointed, and quite devoid of mouldings. In the north wall of the chancel is one of the smallest windows in the Principality : a lancet with cusped top. The font is of the Norman cushion-capital pattern so common in Pembrokeshire. It is a remarkable fact that, although the greater part of the fonts Throughout the county are Norman, with one or two rare exceptions none of the architectural details of the churches is earlier in date than the thirteenth century. through the good offices of Mr. Henry Owen, F.S.A., and with the co-operation of the proprietors, the two inscribed stones from Caswilia, and a third from Rickardston Hall have been released from doing duty as gateposts, and have been once more placed in a consecrated burial-ground at Brawdy. An efficient Ancient Monuments Act will be an unnecessary luxury for Pembrokeshire, even if such a measure is ever passed, as the landed proprietors and the inhabitants of the county generally are taking steps to protect their antiquities without the aid of a Government that " cares for none of these things". The inscriptions on the Caswilia stones have already been read satisfactorily as VENDOGNE and M.vQi^i QUAGTE, but Prof. J. Rhys, who was present, made out one or two more letters on the Rickardston Hall stone after BRI.XCI FILI than he had previously been able to decipher. The second name had a v near the beginning, and a c or g and an i at the end,suggesting some such name as EVOLENGI as a possibility.

The northern set of the chancel of this Church is said to typify the inclination of Christ's head on the cross. Dr. Schwarz, correlating the circumstance with the fact that certain churches in Germany have chancels similarly set to the northward, is inclined to accept this example as " proof of the civilizing influence of the Flemish colonists", but it is not understood that the Flemings of Pembrokeshire had any influence north of Brawdy brook. The Church is dedicated to St David, but the Welsh name of the parish, " Breideth", has been thought to be connected with Sant Ffraed. Seeing that the churches were oriented according to the position of the sun in the eastern horizon on the day of the Saint to whom the Church was to be dedicated, and that St. Bridget's Day falls on the 1st of February , and St Davids Day on the 1st of March , and the difference in the position of the sun when rising on these days is 13 degrees, and that the chancel sets to the northward about 13 degrees, there may be some ground for assuming that the chancel is built on the site of an earlier Church dedicated to St David, and that the present nave was added thereto and dedicated to St. Bridget.

Brawdy Church St David.(RCAM Pembroke)

The site of the present Church was probably occupied by a small sacred building soon after the days of the reputed founder St David, as is evidenced by the Latin and Ogram inscribed stones. There is however, no visible traces of such a building, the earliest portions of the present structure dating from about the middle of the 13th century.

The Church consists of a chancel, 23ft by 14ft, nave, 43.5ft by 16ft, south Chapel or aisle, 32ft by 12ft, south porch western Bell-cote, and a sanctus Bell-cote between the nave and chancel. The original Church consisted only of nave and chancel but later (perhaps between 1400 and 1450) a large south Chapel or aisle was added and connected with the main body by an arch which opens into the eastern end of the nave; this arch is plain pointed and without mouldings and similar to the chancel arch which was doubtless reconstructed at the same period. A modern arch now affords direct communication between the chancel and the aisle. The walling between the nave and the western end of the aisle was allowed to remain, with the exception that what had hitherto been a small external window was removed, and the opening thus made forms the only communication between the nave and the west part of the aisle. This part of the Church is called the Rice Chapel. Beyond the aisle is the porch, opening directly into the nave. It is plain vaulted, and is doubtless the original entrance. Exactly opposite on the north side is a pointed doorway now blocked up. All the windows are modern, except a small trifoliated single light in the north wall of the chancel, and a double light of similar character in the Chapel. Two plain corbels for the rood loft remain, as also the stairway. On the north wall of the chancel are faint indications of red and black letters. The font is of Norman type slightly earlier in date than the building of the 13th century Church; it is square 21in by 11in deep externally, the basin being 17in by 9in deep, the lower edge nicely scalloped; it stands on a circular pillar 11in in height. The base is modern. The total height is 2ft 9in. The Church was thoroughly, and on the whole judiciously, restored in 1879, and was further renovated in 1901 –Visited 12th April 1921.

Church of St David Brawdy 1963 Grade II listed building whitewashed and plastered, nave roof is segmental-pointed and boarded. Square C13 scalloped font with darts and circular shaft. Plain panelled wood early C19 pulpit. By S door, a C5 to C6 incised stone. In wall to south aisle a narrow medieval lancet, originally external, showing that the aisle is added, possibly in C15. Plastered arches to chancel, into aisle from nave, and from chancel, the latter Tudor-arched. two rough stone corbels for former rood-loft. S aisle has boarded roof and early C20 closed screen to cut off E end as vestry. Row of rough corbels along north wall. Chancel has panelled curved late C19 roof, early C20 prayer desk and kneeler, C19 iron altar rails. Stained Glass: west window of Christ in the Temple and east window of Resurrection, both of 1904 by Powell of Whitefriars, London. In porch are three large C5 or C6 inscribed stones with Ogham marks or Roman lettering, the inscriptions very eroded.

Exterior

Medieval parish Church, possibly C14, rubble stone with slate roofs. Restored 1882-4 by E H Lingen-Barker, and east window 1904 by W D Caroe. Nave with west bellcote and south porch, south aisle and chancel. Long low proportions. Nave has C19 2-light west window with quatrefoil and bellcote. Nave south is windowless to left with large south porch in Angle to aisle, rough stone pointed arch, plastered vault within. Nave east gable suggests a previously higher roof pitch and has small sanctus bellcote. South aisle overlaps nave and chancel and has two medieval 2-light south windows, cusped possibly C14 (moved from east and west ends of main Church) and C19 2-light east window. Chancel is windowless to south, and has big 1904 ashlar 3-light east window with segmental arched head, and tiny medieval north-cusped lancet. Nave north has 3 C19 2-light windows, cusped lancets, and blocked low pointed central door.

Wales before 1066 by Donald Gregory.

There is little sign of life in Brawdy except the aerodrome and a farm next to the Church whose churchyard is both circular and very large, and in summer much overgrown with brambles. In the porch are three memorial stones, two of which are horizontal and the other vertical. This vertical stone and the smaller of the horizontal ones have Latin inscriptions, while the other one has a message in Ogham. Two of these gravestones have holes in them suggesting that at some time in their long history they may have been used as gateposts. Inside the Church there is a fourth memorial stone, with an incomplete inscription in Latin.

The nave walls with one crudely made south lancet without glass and the font are of c1200. A pointed arch opens into a chancel of c1300 inclined to the north. A similar arch gives onto a small 13C transept enlarged to the west in the early 15C when the Rice Chapel was added to the east of it. There is a fragment of an inscribed stone in the nave and in the porch are three old stones, two with Ogham inscriptions. Restored in 1879 and 1901. Norman font, holy wells - ogham stones - 5-600AD and there is a Roman inscribed stone .

Brawdy was a prebend and also a vicarage, but no record is known that gives the name of any holder, of the prebend. It seems certain, however, that there were such prebendaries, as Bishop Richard Carew in his Statute dated 1259, by which he appropriated the prebend of Brawdy to the support of the Bishops table, distinctly mentions that the prebend was then vacant. According to Angla. Sacra vol. II., p.609, this prebend was made a knights fee by Geoffrey de Henelawe, who was elected Bishop of St Davids in 1204.

Treffgarne British School

On the 12th January I visited the above place. I found the schoolroom well supplied with desks and benches, and cards and maps of the British and Foreign School Society. The school was supported by the subscriptions of the neighbouring farmers, and managed by a committee. Each subscriber of 5s per annum and upwards was considered on the committee. The desks, benches and apparatus were all in very good repair. The room was well lighted by three glazed windows; the floor was of earth and lime, and rather damp. I noticed in the room a blackboard and also flagstaffs for the use of those boys who were taught practical land surveying. The only books kept were a book of admission and a daily attendance book. The master was a very intelligent person. The children were not present. The room was too small by half to accommodate the number on the books. I was subsequently informed by the master that on the following day the committee had determined upon erecting a new and efficient school room David Lewis Assistant.

ap Rhys John of Rickeston Brawdy grandson of David son of Sir Rhys ap Thomas , married daughter of John Perrott of Scotsborough High Sheriff of Pembrokeshire 1582

Catherine Perrot the daughter and heiress of John Perrot, the last of the line, brought Scotsborough by marriage to John ap Rhys, of Rickerston in Brawdy. This John Perrot was sheriff in 1551, the year before his great namesake, with whom he has been confused. In 1545 he brought an action against John Wogan of Wiston, who had the custody of his estate during his minority, for waste of his lands at Scotsborough, Knightston, Cornydown Cornish Down and Canaston." Among his other mis-deeds, Wogan had cut down two "avelanos called wall nuttrees". Thomas , Perrot, the second of the Scotsborough line, was one of the three commissioners appointed in 1405 to buy off Owen Glyndwr."

ap Rhys John 1598 of Rickeston Brawdy and Scotsborough married Perrot Katherine born in 1530 daughter and sole heiress of Perrot John of Scotsborough, a large mansion in Gumfreston parish, near Tenby, owner of a valuable estate in South Pembrokeshire . The Perrots had held Scotborough since the latter half of the fourteenth century. In 1405 Perrot Thomas of that place negotiated a truce with Glyndwr, Owen and eight years later served as Mayor of Tenby his descendants intermarried with the families of Verney, Wogan of Wiston, Wyrriot of Orielton, and Lloyd of Tenby. This union allied John ap Rice to some of the best known houses in west Wales. As JP he took part in suppressing popish practices to which many Pembrokeshire People still adhered, and in 1592, together with Owen George and Stepneth Alban, caused St Meugan's Chapel on the border of Cemaes and Emlyn to be denuded of superstitious relics and monuments and prepared to prosecute all people still attempting to use the place for religious purposes. John died in 1598 and was buried in Brawdy Church. Inscribed Stones

In the porch of the Church are three inscribed stones which have been removed hither for better preservation, two from Cas Wilia and the third from Richardston.

The first stone at the present time bears certain characters of Ogam script, with the possible additions of a few strokes which Sir John Rhys suggests might be part of Roman letters- The Ogam characters on the right hand edge of the stone form the personal name VENDOGNI. The stone had served for an unknown period of time as a footbridge over a stream on the farm Cas Wilia, where are the remains of an early camp. Its total length is 9 ½ ft.

It has been found that the British Museum manuscripts Stowe, 1023 and 1024 consist of sketches which appear to be the original or duplicates drawings made by antiquary Edward Lluyd or one of his companions during their journey through the Principality in the years 1680-1700. Among them is a sketch of the Latin inscription that was then more legible than it is at present.

UENDAGNI FILIUPQNI

The other Cas Wilia stone has only an Ogam inscription, which was Read by Sir John Rhys as

MAQUI QUEGTE

Before its removal to the Church porch it served as a gate post, the farm house standing “within an old rath consisting of rather imposing ditches, which remain above the outhouses” Its total length is 6ft 8in.

The third stone was formerly in use as a gatepost on Richardston Hall farm. The inscription is in

Latin and reads BRIACI FIL _ V G _

Dinasoedd

Across the neck of a long and narrow promontory which has been reduced to a razor like sharpness by the ceaseless action of the elements have been drawn a bank and ditch, the latter being on the landward side of the defences. The bank has an average height of barely 2ft and there is at present no break in its length of about 100yds which would represent the entrance to the enclosure thus formed; but it is possible that this may have been swept away. The Pembroke Archaeological Survey (p 46) notes within the enclosure “one circular but foundation clearly defined but no stones are visible”. No hut dwelling is now to be traced. --Visited 3rd Mar 1921

Brawdy Castle

At a distance of 400 yds directly east of the parish Church of Brawdy is a small dingle called Crow Cwm. The defile is traversed by a rivulet which at its northern termination divides into two smaller streams, one passing to the south and the other to the north side of rising ground which closes the dingle, thus forming a tiny promontory. Across this tongue of land have been drawn two strong earth banks each with its corresponding outer ditch, the triangular enclosure thus formed being about 200 ft from north to south by about 150ft from the tip of the promontory to the base of the inner bank. Both banks have an outward curve. The inner bank is about 200 ft in length, the out about 500ft. The latter rises immediately beyond the intervening ditch but about midway in its northward course the distance between the banks is increased so that at its northern termination there is a space of 80ft between them. An intermediate bank seems to have been introduced where the space permitted of it, but the site is so overgrown with brambles that it is impossible to say whether this middle bank has its own ditch. The ramparts are not carried to the verge of the cliff on the south side of the position, where was the entrance to the enclosure. The earthworks are a good example of the promontory fort and should receive careful preservation. The position is marked on the current Ordinance maps as a “Roman Camp” Visited 12th April 1921.

Brawdy Castle;Brawdy Promontory Fort

Brawdy Castle is an enclosure set above the confluence of two streams, defined on the south and east by steep natural scarps, whilst about the north and west is a quadrant of three banks with intermediate ditches; the roughly triangular interior has a maximum depth of 48m, the defences occupying a band about 50m across.

An excavation, 1985-91, produced evidence for an involved sequence of occupation, Iron Age, and later. Sources: Dark 1990 Brawdy - interim report(s); 1994 'Discovery by Design'.

Romano-British,

Brawdy Soil mark

Bigney.

At about 300yds east of Pen y Cwn post office and about the same distance east of Llethr farm house, are the faint remains of a circular earthwork which is known in the vicinity as “Bigney” of Bickney”. The Pembrokeshire Archaeological Survey terms it a “tumulus” which is almost certainly an error. The enclosed bank is quite continuous, though it does not anywhere rise above 2ft. There are now no signs of a ditch. The entrance was probably on the east side. Though the term “Hill Fort” is a misnomer as applied to it, the enclosure occupies the highest point in the immediate neighbourhood, and commands a wide outlook. It has been the site of a beacon.

Visited 13th April 1921.

Eweston Camp

This is an almost perfect circular earthwork placed upon rising ground above the stream called the Bran ddu Brook; it commands several Fords. The defences consist of a bank which has an average height of 8ft, and an external ditch now about 4ft deep; the counterscarp has a rise of about 8ft. The entrance was to the south; it appears to have been of simple character but has been much disturbed. There is a modern entrance on the north side. The north to south diameter is 190ft that from east to west is 200ft –Visited 12 April 1921.

Cas Wilia

This has been an important earthwork, but is now much destroyed and almost obliterated on the east and south. The work stands on the west bank of the Bran ddu Brook, at this point the boundary between the parishes of Brawd y and St Lawrence. It consists of an inner enclosure 150ft bt 100ft in diameter, defended by two, and in places three earthen banks and ditches. When reported upon about thirty years ago, the defences “where best preserved, consisting of a rampart 3ft above the interior, with two other ramparts in front; the outer has no ditch; their crests are ten ft and three ft below the first. The ditches are shallow, the outer one being deepest being only 3ft below the ground outside. On the north west side, between the inner and second bank an additional bank has been interpolated for some distance. It is now 2ft only above the first ditch, and 3ft between it and the second line. This bank for a distance of 50ft from the entrance, has been replaced by a terrace. --Visited 27th April 1921.

Pontz or Punch Castle

This is a mound of the motte and Bailey type but at present it shows no sign of a Bailey of having ever possessed one. The mound is 30ft high; the base circumference is 300ft, and a summit diameter of 30ft. On the top is a saucer like depression, marking the presence of a building of some kind, and there are slight remains of stone walling of comparatively recent date. The surrounding ditch of a width of 15ft is fairly well preserved. The field to the west of the mound is called Parc y Castle and if a Bailey ever existed it probably was placed here.

About the middle of the 19th century the south side of the mound was dug into, when several “bronze coins” were discovered. “A stone has also been found in the mound on which was inscribed a Tau cross, the incision being about one inch deep and the cross about seven inches long (Pem. Arch Survey p46) This stone has been built into the wall of the adjacent farm house of Pointz Castle, and is now very indistinct owing to coats of whitewash – Visited 13th April 1921.

Pointz Castle; Punch Castle

Pointz Castle is a ditched motte, 36m in diameter and 4.0m high, with no trace of further works. There are possible traces of a stonewalled structure upon the motte summit
In the 19th century several unspecified bronze coins were found on the slopes of the mound, which has also produced a cross inscribed stone hinting at an earlier origin for the mound.

Pointz Castle is a twelfth-century motte still standing about 4m (30ft) high with an outer ditch. It was built by Punch or Ponce (an alternative name for the site is Punch Castle), a tenant of the Bishop of St Davids, and was later worked as a farm by the Clergy. No traces of an outer Bailey survive, but surveyors in the 1920s noted that it may have lain in the nearby field to the west called Parc y Castle. RCAHMW, T. Driver, 28 June 2007

Brawdy House

This farmhouse which incorporates in its structure some few remains of the earlier manor house of Brawdy is said to have been almost entirely rebuilt by George Gwyther, great grandfather to the present owner and occupier, about the close of the 18th century. The farm buildings bear the date 1740. Some of the closed windows mark portions of the earlier residence that were spared. Fenton (Tour 142) found it “deserted” In the spring of 1921 the corn drying kiln, said to have been the oldest part of the buildings suddenly collapsed. It was connected with the dwelling house by a gallery leading from a window on the first floor of the house. The interior of the present house has no features of interest –Visited 12 April 1921.

Parc garreg lwyd

This name which seems to have been forgotten is given to a field on the farm of Dolgwn, and suggests that a maenhir once stood on or near it.

Carreg Lwyd

Parc garreg ucha –issa

Three adjoining fields in Trefgarn Owen, doubtless formerly one; probably the site of a destroyed monolith. About 300 yds to the south is Parc Sarney which may mark a cobbled pathway to the site

Greystone Field

The second field directly east of Three Houses farm – Apparently of no Archaeological significance. Visited 12th April 1921

Chapel field

In the second field south of the farmhouse of Gignog wen the plough frequently turns up stones of a ruined building locally called the little Chapel. Some ten years ago a fragment of carved stone too decayed to admit of identification was thus unearthed. Visited 12th April 1921.

Whitestone

The field directly south of Chapel Field derives its name from the fragments of white quartz which are frequently found on its surface. There is no erect stone upon it.

Ancient Manor Houses.

The remains of several early residents in the parish, though themselves of no architectural interest call for record as marking Properties where various objects of antiquity have been discovered or sheltered.

Rickardston Manor

The Briaci inscribed stone once formed a gatepost on this farm, which may have been its original site. One of the fields is styled Parc garreg lwyd. Fenton (tour 39) mentions the earlier house as having "a court in front entered by a gateway, over which are the arms of Urien Rheged, bespeaking its former possessor to be of that stock" A much weathered stone escutcheon is built into the front of a cart house, and as it faintly shows a chevron between three birds, is probably the stone that Fenton saw.

Rickeston Manor, Brawdy

Site has been cleared for airfield. Medieval fishpond site - drained but still marshy. Replaced by Rickleston Hall to the North , said to have been built largely out of the fabric of the manor. The drained fishpond and a second pool to the East, are set between the two sites and can be associated with either. J.Wiles 15.05.02 RCAHMW

Rickeston Hall Brawdy

Early 19th century mansion built of randomly coursed rubble (some of which may have been reused from the lost medieval manor). It is 3-storeys high with a 4 window front and slate roofs with cresting to the front. 12-pane sash window to both the ground floor and 1st floor, and 6-pane sashes to the 2nd floor: all floors with voussoirs, keystones and stone sills. The entrance is offset to the left and has a 6-panel door with traceried over-light. CADW

Finds

Stone implement

A fine polished greenstone axehead found some time prior to the year 1864 when it was exhibited to the Cambrian Archaeological Association at Haverfordwest by its owner the late Mr J W Phillips. It has a length of 9in and a cutting edge of 3in across. It is now in the possession of Mr J W Phillips, solicitor Haverfordwest –Seen 28th July 1920.

Stone hammer

On the occasion of the meeting of the Cambrian Archaeological Association at Tenby 1851 Mr John Fenton, the eldest son of the historian of the county exhibited a stone hammer which had been in a carnedd near Cronllwyn, Brawdy parish, and a small stone ring found in the same place. These were in all probability unearthed by Richard Fenton in the course of one of his excavations.

Stone Celt

Found when sinking a well on the site of Newgale Manor (New Villa). It passed into the possession of the late Mr H W Williams of Solva, but cannot now be traced.

Carved Stones etc.

In the precincts of the present farmhouse of Cas (or Castell Wilia which includes part of the ancient earthworks stood two inscribed stones now in the porch of Brawdy Church. Other objects of the late medieval period which mark the continued and probably unbroken occupation of the place are a coin of 1573; two iron Cannon balls ,much corroded and weighing 4lbs each, found in one of the ditches of the earthwork, now said to be lost; many fragments of carved and dressed stones. About 1905 two pieces of what appears to have been a trefoil headed window were found in the ruins of a fowl house; one of these is in the museum of the Carmarthenshire Antiquarian Society at Carmarthen.

RAF Brawdy

RAF Brawdy was a Royal Air Force station in South West Wales near to St David's.

The Pembrokeshire base was officially opened on 2 February 1944 as a satellite station for the nearby RAF St David's. On 1 January 1946 the station was handed over to the Fleet Air Arm of the Royal Navy and was initially used as a relief Landing Ground for RNAS Dale. It was commissioned as HMS Goldcrest on 4 September 1952. In March 1953 the first Hawker Sea Hawk entered service with 806 NAS at RNAS Brawdy. The Royal Navy left in 1971 and the base was allocated to the Department of the Environment.

In February 1974 the Royal Air Force returned with D Flight of 22 Squadron taking up residence with their Whirlwind HAR.10 search and rescue helicopters. In September of the same year 229 Operational Conversion Unit (later the Tactical Weapons Unit) joined D Flight having been forced to relocate after the closure of RAF Chivenor.

The base was home to Hawker Hunter aircraft of the TWU, and the gate guardian at the base was a Hawker Hunter FGA.9 (XE624). This airframe was subsequently sold to a private collector, Steve Petch, who is in the process of creating a website for the aircraft.

By the late 80's it operated BAe Hawk T.1A (234 and 79 Squadron) and Sea King (202 Squadron, B Flight) aircraft. The RAF withdrew in 1992 and the base, now known as Cawdor Barracks, is currently occupied by the Royal Signals, being the main electronic warfare base of the British Army.

The US Navy at Brawdy

In April 1974 a United States Navy SOSUS station, known as NAVFAC Brawdy, was built adjacent to the RAF base. In 1995 the Joint Maritime Facility at St. Mawgan in Cornwall replaced NAVFAC Brawdy and the facility was deactivated on 1 October 1995

Brawdy Airfield;Royal Naval Air Station

A large amount of redevelopment of the wartime airfield was undertaken by the Admiralty in 1951- and again in 1961-63. Three new interconnected hangars and a technical support facility were added in the 1950s. The wartime Romney huts were also replaced by brick buildings incorporating a mess Hall and accommodation block. The original watch tower became the fire station, and a new watch tower was built to a naval pattern. It was modified to a RAF pattern, but later topped with a modern control room. The structure has now been demolished. One of Brawdy's wartime runways has been closed, but the two others have been extended and large concrete aprons have replaced the former dispersal areas. There are a collection of former US Naval buildings next to the main gate.

Event and Historical Information:

Before it was officially opened on 2 February 1944, Brawdy airfield had been used a Satellite Landing Ground by the Handley Page Halifaxes of 58 and 502 Squadrons when cross-winds made take-offs of fully fuelled aircraft impracticable at St David's. Brawdy was the wartime base of 517 Squadron which flew meteorological information gathering flights out over the Atlantic. The Squadron flew Handley Page Halifax Mk II and Mk V heavy bombers. Squadron 517 left Brawdy for RAF Weston Zoyland in September 1945. Other wartime units include a detachment of 595 Squadron flying Supermarine Spitfires towing target gliders. Thirty Spitfires and De Havilland Mosquitoes from 8 Operational Training Unit were detached from Haverfordwest to Brawdy from February 1945 for photographic reconnaissance training. On 1 November 1945, St David's station headquarters was transferred to Brawdy and from 1 January 1946, the airfield was taken over by the Admiralty. The airfield returned to RAF control in 1974. More recently, it has been taken over for army storage with the runways kept in operational readiness. RCAHMMW, June 2008.

Bridell; Briddell

Topographical Dictionary of Wales Lewis 1839 Bridell

Bridell (Briddell) , a parish, in the union of Cardigan, partly in the hundred of Kemmes, but principally in that of Kilgerran, county of Pembroke, South Wales, 2½ miles (S.) from Cardigan; containing 404 inhabitants. This parish is situated on the road from Cardigan to Narberth, and is bounded on the north by the parish of Kilgerran, on the south by Llanvair-Nantyn, on the east by Manerdivy, and on the west by the parish of Llantyd. It comprises by a measurement 3000 acres, of which 1000 are arable, 1850 pasture, 100 meadow, and 50 woodland. The surface is beautifully undulated, and ornamented in various parts with plantations of larch and fir, interspersed with oak, ash, and sycamore trees: there are some inconsiderable Brooks, the principal being that called Pille, which bounds the parish. The soil is loamy with small patches of clay, and the lands are in some parts very well adapted to tillage. There are numerous stone-quarries, the produce of which is used by the farmers for buildings and fences; also a corn-mill, and a carding machine. The gentlemen's seats are, Tŷgwyn, and Plâs-y-Briddell: most of the farmhouses are of modern erection. The living is a discharged rectory, rated in the King's Books at £9, and in the patronage of the Freeholders of the parish: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £180. The Church, dedicated to St. David, is a small ancient structure, beautifully situated, and embosomed among trees, whose luxuriant foliage almost conceals it from the view; it contains twelve or thirteen pews, with several benches for the poor. In the churchyard stands an ancient cross, of the kind called St. Catherine's, supported on a plain shaft about nine feet high, but the inscription has been obliterated by time. There is a place of worship for dissenters, with a Sunday school held in it. John Jones, of Pantyderri, in 1729 left a sum of 20s. to the poor, but the bequest is unproductive.

John Marius Wilson's Imperial Gazetteer of England and Wales 1870-72 described Bridell like this:

Bridell, a parish in the district of Cardigan and county of Pembroke; near the river Teifi and the Carmarthen and Cardigan railway, 3 miles S by E of Cardigan. Post Town, Cardigan. Acres, 2,179. Real property, £1,659. Pop., 326. Houses, 73. The property is divided among a few. The living is a rectory in the diocese of St Davids. Value, £110. Patron, the Freeholders of the parish. The Church is ancient, in tolerable condition; and a St. Catherine's cross is in the churchyard. There is a dissenting Chapel.

Bridell a parish in Pembrokeshire 2 miles SW of Cilgerran. In the churchyard is preserved an Ogham Stone. Tiny Church St Davids - rebuilt 1886.

Ogham stone - 7ft high in churchyard - 5th C - NETTASAGRU MAQI MUCOI BRECI (Nettasagrus son of the descendant of Brecos). The person buried here was a son of a kinsman of Brychan Brycheiniog, founder of Brecon; incised cross and circle believed added later.

RCAM Pub 1923 -The Parish Church

Dedicated to St David.

The Church was practically rebuilt in the year 1886 doubtless on the early foundations. It consists of nave, chancel, north porch and Bell cote above the western gable. A portion of the earlier west wall was retained, and strengthened externally by a buttress. The font is a plain square bowl, 18in outer and 14in inner measurements; it stands on a circular shaft and square base, and has a total height of 27in. It is devoid of ornamental detail, but is without doubt of the Norman period. Visited 3rd August 1914

EXTERIOR – Mediaeval origins, rebuilt 1812 and again 1886-7 by H. Prothero of Middleton, Prothero and Philott, of Cheltenham. Small and low, in rubble stone with Doubling stone dressings and slate roofs. Nave and chancel with bellcote and 1887 N porch and N vestry. Coped shouldered gables. W end big centre buttress with 1887 moulded plinth and coping, and gabled bellcote with two arched openings. N porch with coped gable, Tudor arched entry and 1887 plaque. One nave 3- light flat-headed Perpendicular style window. Nave S has two similar 4-light windows, and chancel S one similar 3-light. Chancel has 2-light E window, flat-headed with ornate reticulated tracery, and N vestry. Two slate plaques inset into the S walls, one of 1815, the other of 1808.

INTERIOR – C20 Roughcast cladding, plain chancel arch. Plain wishbone-truss roofs, reused from previous Church. Fittings all of 1887 including pews, panelled oak pulpit, tiled floors with encaustic tiles in chancel, two high-backed chancel stalls given by the architect, H. Prothero, and lectern. Medieval square font with bead moulding to Angles, the lower corners slightly rounded. Circular short shaft. No stained glass.

The Church before restoration had 2 pointed Georgian sashes on S side, the big W buttress and the bellcote, and was said to have been rebuilt only 80 years before. The restoration plan proposed retaining the walls, W front, base of the buttress externally, the base of the chancel arch, and the font, and re-using the roof trusses. The contractors were Griffiths and Thomas of Cilgerran.

There were said to be two bells here in 1926 and the Church contained 77 sittings.

Church Plate of Pembrokeshire.

Bridell (St David). — This Church was restored in 1887. There is in present use a Chalice which is a good example of the Commonwealth period. It carries a plain square- shaped bowl which rests on a baluster stem; it measures 6 in. in height, and is Hall-marked 1655 ; the maker's mark is the letter M with mullet or pellet beneath in a heart-shaped shield. A Chalice and Paten cover at St. Martin's, Leicester (1662), a Credence Paten at St. John's, Cardiff (1662), and a plain Tankard belonging to the Fishmongers' Company (1666), are apparently by the same maker.

The following inscription is rudely stippled round the lip of the bowl, "I.G. L.H. Bridell 1687." They are probably the initials of the then Churchwardens. The bowl measures 3 in. in diameter; depth, 3 in.; weight, 8 oz. 6 dwts

A pewter Plate bearing no marks, 8 in. in diameter. There is also a small electro-plated Paten.

Inscribed Stone

To the south side of the churchyard is an erect pointed stone 7ft in height, with an inscription in Ogam which Read NETTASAGRI MAQI MVCOI BRECI. On the broad face of the cross is a small equal armed cross within a circle. There are small hollows at the intersection of the arms which according to Mr Romilly Allen “give the character to the cross” Visited 3rd Aug 1914.

Nettasagrus Stone, Bridell

The Nettasagrus stone is a monolith

2.2m high, bears the following inscription:

NETTASAGRU MAQI MUCOI BRECI ((the stone) of Nattasagrus son of the descendant of Brecos),

It also bears an inscribed, ringed cross.

The inscription is thought to be 5-

6th century and the cross 9th century.

The monument is set in St David's churchyard, Bridell.

This parish has no resident Clergyman, it is an agricultural parish where labourers receive 6d per day with food or 1s a day on their own finding. The moral character is reported as good according to Rev J F George the Rector of Park-y-trap Cardigan. There are no resident proprietors and only one farmer paying more than £100 rent per annum. The population for the most part cannot Read or write and it is estimated that 68 children in the parish have no schooling

The Board School for the district was built in 1879 and opened 1880. It was licensed for religious services in 1886 during the period that the Church was restored.

It closed on 4th April 1968 .

On 21st June 1968 the former school was advertised for sale. The building was then converted into a private house.

Castell Cwmffrwd

On the left bank of the river Piliau about 500 yds south of Gwnlwn farm house are the slight remains of what was apparently a circular enclosure. A short length of the western bank, much ploughed down, is all that survives. There are no appearances of a ditch – Visited 4th August 1914

Castell;Cwmbettws Defended Enclosure, Bridell

An earthwork enclosure, of uncertain date, formed from the tip of a west-facing spur, set between two stream valleys : a roughly oval area, about 22-26m east-west by 22m, tapering to the west, is defined by a ditch cutting across the ridge against rising ground on the east & elsewhere by degraded earthwork banks, set about the levelled interior. RCAHMW J.Wiles 22.03.05

Y Gaer

In Arch Camb 1872 p 358 is a reference to “the remains of some earthworks known as Y Gaer which may be seen a short distance from Rencestyll near Y felin freuan” The original 1in Ord map marks an earthwork at this spot, but the modern 6in sheet gives no indication of an antiquity, although the names “Gaer” and “Gaer Wood” are found in the immediate neighbourhood. The earthwork is a small almost square enclosure; the north western side has a sharp fall to the little river Piliau, which runs at the bottom of a deep ravine. The south western bank has disappeared entirely. And the south eastern and north eastern banks barely rise above the surrounding level. The east angle is well defined. The length of the respective sides would appear to have been about 120ft. The ditch has altogether vanished. The enclosure is called “Parc bach hen gaer” --Visited 3rd August 1914.

Parc pen cestyll

On a field of this name directly west of the parish Church, on which stands Pen cestyll cottage “there were discovered some years ago a considerable number of interments, each in a kind of cistfaen” (Arch Camb 1860 p 317 ; 1872 p358) About the year 1885 when the gravel pit in this field was being worked. Mr Joseph Williams of Fenin ganol farm, saw what he described as “several stone lined graves about 2ft below the surface. There were no signs of any interment in them' the stones were removed, and no traces of the graves are now visible. -Visited 4th August 1914.

Quern. In the year 1866 a portion of the upper stone of a quern was discovered in the field behind the present house of Penrallt Hywell – It is circular in from about 18in in diameter. It tapers gently from the base. Height 8in. At the side is the hole for the handle (Hist Cilgerran p145)

Ffynnon Llawddog

“A farm called Ffynnon Lawddog in the parish of Bridell and on the confines of this [Cilgerran], which derives its name from a well on the land, which , for some reason or other, in very remote times was considered to be under the invocation of our saint. But I am not aware that any healing or miraculous powers have ever been attributed to its waters. At any rate no tradition to that effect has been handed down to the present age” (Phillips, History of Cilgerran 1867 p51)

Broadhaven,(Walton West Parish) (Coalfield)

Near Haverfordwest, has a large sandy beach, one of the finest in Pembrokeshire. "The Haven", as it has always been known to Haverfordwest people became a fashionable resort early in the last century. The cliffs both to north and south of the main beach are of great interest to geologists, showing spectacular structures in the Coal Measures. There has been much recent housing development. The resort is well blessed with hostels, guest houses and caravan sites, and the new Youth Hostel and Pembrokeshire Countryside Unit are added attractions.

Fenton, Tours 1811

[Fenton was travelling along Newgale sands from St David's]

Open the sands of Broad Haven, of late become a favourite resort for bathing where many little villas are scattered about for that purpose, it being very commodiously situated, as not exceeding the distance of seven miles from Haverfordwest, for the gentry and fashionables of that place, many of whom pass the greater part of the summer here. The air here is remarkably salubrious, coming laden with salts wafted over St Bride's Bay, and the sea being quite pure and unmixed, as receiving no influx of fresh water, the bathing is admirable, either in a machine on the fine hard sands, or in the retired coves under the romantic and high cliffs of Drewson...

Some gentlemen frequenters of this spot have their yachts sailing about the beautiful bay, abounding with fish, turbot, soles, and doreys, whereby their own tables are amply supplied and the public are treated with the surplus at sixpence a pound.

Coal Mining Broadhaven –

When I stayed at Broadhaven in the 1970's I talked to some of the older local people and they told me about places where they said coal-mining had taken place. I have since tried to find records but as far back as Fenton, Tours published in 1811, I could find no reference and Fenton records it as a holiday resort with no mention of Mining although he does refer to Little Haven as exporting culm in summer.

Recently a report came to my notice and I quote a small portion from it.

The report is the published product of a study made by the British Geological Survey (BGS) in response to a public concern regarding geo-hazards affecting Broad Haven Primary School, reportedly there was serious problem regarding drainage and ground stability in an area bordering the village of Broad Haven on the South Pembrokeshire coast. His (Mr Clarke) enquiry concerned the possibility of old mine-workings in an area of land that he farmed adjacent to Broad Haven Primary School, where there had been problems with flooding after several periods of heavy rainfall during the wet summer and autumn of 2008. During a site visit by Dr J.R. Davies of the British Geological Survey (BGS) on 11th October, it was noted that there was continuing substantial run-off from the adjacent field into the school site. The school lies in the floor of a shallow valley, down-slope and immediately west of the field from which run-off occurred.

Broad Haven, Haverfordwest, Pembrokeshire. BGS Enquiry IDA 165862.

Coal Mining History

Mining within the Pembrokeshire Coalfield appears to have reached its zenith in the latter half of the 18th Century, from when it rapidly declined. As a result, sources of information are lacking for large parts of the coalfield, and the relationships between coal seams within different areas are not fully understood. Much of the coal was worked in a piecemeal manner from opencast pockets ('slashes' or 'slatches') as, and when, they were discovered, although underground working also took place.

In the Broad Haven area, both methods were in operation at various times. Large opencast workings for 'Culm' (crushed and tectonised coal) took place in the valley immediately north of the Royal Hotel, whereas to the east and south-east, coal was worked at depth from a number of mine shafts. In this area, which extends as far as Broadway, coal was worked from at least three closely-spaced seams; these are, in descending order, the Foxhill, Migrement and Coal veins. The seams were exploited over a wide area, and, as a result, were considered to be uneconomic when investigated for their opencast resource potential in the late 1940's.

Mine Workings

The mines east of Broad Haven were drained by a 'level' which was driven from a point within Mr Clark's field eastwards towards Foxhill Farm, and then north-eastwards towards Broadway. A number of shafts are situated along the line of the level, and at least four of these are shown on the 1907 geological map within Mr Clark's field. The two westernmost airshafts are shown as dashed circular features on the 1889 OS map and it is possible that these had collapsed or were partially filled by this time. The map also shows two further mineshaft's in the upper part of the field, close to its south eastern boundary and more occur nearby within adjacent fields. Small areas of spoil that previously surrounded these features are also shown on the geological map.

They are now recognisable by areas of dark soil within the upper part of the field. An area of tipped and partially re-excavated material may represent the remains of one of the spoil heaps. The survey of 1907 also shows a 'hole', which was probably a 'crown hole' (a circular depression caused by collapse above a void) in the upper part of the field. However, none of the features identified on the geological map (drainage level, shafts or crown hole) are visible at surface at present, and it is likely that they have been filled in and ploughed over.

Wrecks

1876 Broadhaven

The Ann and Mary was a wooden schooner built at King's Ferry, Flint, in 1851. Technical and configuration specifications are given as: 63.80gt; 66.1ft length x 18.2ft breadth x 8.95ft depth in hold; 1 deck, 2 mast, rigging schooner, stern elliptical, built carvel, head woman's bust, framework wood; official number 22303. At time of loss on 15 November 1876, the Port of Chester Shipping Register (3 in 1873) notes that the owners were Anne Powell (managing owner), Mary Powell and Margaret Powell of Queen's Ferry, Flint, spinisters. The schooner was on passage from Cardiff to Holyhead when it became stranded at Broad Haven. Its Register entry is closed with the annotation 'lost at sea near Skomer Island near Milford 15 November 1876'.

Hanging Stone,

Two miles from the Church in the direction of Haverfordwest but reached by a side road is a cromlech in excellent preservation with a very massive cap-stone. supported on three pillars
A burial chamber, probably 3000-2000 BC

This cromlech stands in the field directly east of Westfield Cottage, and within a few yards of the western boundary of the parish of Burton. The hedge has been brought up to the site and covers a small portion of it. The cromlech is aligned north and south. The massive capstone, 10 feet 6 inches long, 9 feet broad, and 4 feet deep, is supported on three boulders of a height of between 5 and 6 feet. The lower surface of the capstone is fairly flat, but the upper side is roof-shaped. When visited by the Cambrian Arch Association in 1864 (Arch. Camb., III, x, 346) there were visible " the remains of original small, dry masonry by which the gaps between the larger stones were carefully filled up." By 1872 the chamber had been cleared out, and only " a very small portion of the dry masonry remained " (ib., IV iii, 125). The hedge has gradually encroached upon this part of the structure. There is visible a portion of another large stone, which suggests that the original structure was a double cromlech. .About 120 feet to the north is a stone 3 feet high which may have had some connection with the cromlech.—Visited, 20th July, 1920.

Benton Avenue

(Williamston)

In Arch Camb.. for 1870 (IV, i, 120, with plan) Sir Gardner Wilkinson, F.R.S., drew attention to what he described as " one of the largest and most important " stone avenues in the United Kingdom which he had examined and planned in the year 1862.

Doubt is thrown upon the authenticity of the alignment, it being stated that when the members of Pembrokeshire association visited Benton, August, 1897, Mr. Davies, the tenant, informed. Edward Laws, that many years ago he and his father. during the temporary absence of the late Sir John Scourfield, removed a portion of the alignment, but that when Sir John returned ' he almost cried with rage and made the Davies's restore the avenue,; because his mother had made it.' " The avenue does not appear on early maps or in literature, and there can be little doubt that it is of modern construction.—Visited, 20th July, 1920.

Hill forts

On the field close by Hearson (Hill) Mountain Methodist Chapel is a circular earthwork which is not marked on the 6 in. Ordnance sheet. The surrounding bank of earth and the corresponding exterior ditch have disappeared in places, but sufficient remains to show that the enclosed area had a diameter of about 190 feet To the south-east the bank is from 4 feet to 6 feet high, and the counterscarp of the ditch has a rise of about 4 feet. The entrance was probably on the west side,

Burton Church --- RCAM

The Church consists of chancel (22 feet by 11feet), nave (26 feet by 18 feet), south aisle to chancel named St Andrew's Chapel (22 feet by 13 feet), north transept, south transept Chapel, north aisle, west tower (18 feet six in by 15 feet 6in), and south porch.

The oldest part of the present Church is St Andrews Chapel or aisle which was probably the original Church around which the other parts have been added. The north wall of this aisle retains a length of stone moulding above the arcade opening into the Chancel and on the original exterior side of of the same wall, now the south side of the chancel, are three rude corbels of the earlier roof. In the west wall is a blocked door, having above it a small pointed window. The Chapel is lighted at the east end by a modern three-light decorated window, which is probably a copy of the original, and by six narrow lancets of the Early English period, which, though restored, are those of the first Church. Beneath the east window is a plain pointed aumbry. To the Early English building the main structure less the modern north side, appears to have been added at the end of the 13th or beginning of the 14th century.

A new Church was built at the north of the original building, the east end of which was kept in line with the existing east wall, and the earlier Church became St Andrews Chapel being connected with the new chancel by an opening of three plain pointed arches resting on square piers formed out of the walling. The chancel has a shallow recess in the north wall, probably for a tomb or chantry Chapel. The windows have been modernised. A squint was made in the west wall chancel wall from the north transept; on the south side what was probably the west door of St Andrews Church became an interior doorway between that Church and the east end of the nave.

Across the east end of the nave was a rood-loft which probably carried across that part of the original west wall of St Andrew's Church which had been taken into the new building. Externally this eastern nave wall was crowned with a Sanctus Bell-cote. The transepts are both plain vaulted. The chancel has a piscina, a recess, and a squint from the south transept.

The small transepts are 14c additions to a 13c nave and chancel. The west tower and probably also the porch are 15c or 16c. The north aisle is Victorian. The Church, has an uncommon altar tomb dated c1520 in the centre of the chancel of one of the Wogans of Milton and Boulston. There is no effigy. The slab bears a cross ragulé with two shields; whilst other shields decorate the sides. Note the initials R.W., and the "canting" device of a windmill and a tun (the Wogans being the lords of Milton)

The font probably dates from the early Church but has been considerably altered.

Early fonts did not have covers but in 1236 the Archbishop of Canterbury ordered fonts to be covered and locked so that superstitious people could not steal the holy water.

Prior to 1603 there may well have not been a pulpit in a Church. It was then that it was ordered that pulpits be placed in all churches. Previously a sermon would either have been preached outside probably at the preaching cross or from the altar, later from the chancel steps. The early pulpits were moveable so as the preacher could have it moved to the least draughty part of the Church.

There were originally 3 preaching crosses in the parish of Burton but traces have been lost---

Burton Rectory has been in lay hands from the date of the earliest known presentation. This Church was assessed in 1291 at £8, the tenths payable to the King being 16s.—Taxatio.

In 1594 the patronage was an appendage to the manor of Burton. Owen's Pembrokeshire.

The Rectory

Prior to the year 1905, when it was completely remodelled, this house possessed several features of interest, including " a fine vaulted room used as a dairy. which were then destroyed. What was described by the rector as ' a concrete floor about two feet thick, and forming the floor of one room and passage between the house and the stables, which were joined at the time, was then discovered. The floor was composed of very hard cement, beneath which was earth and then large stones plastered together and arched. This has been removed and the stables separated from the house by a wide passage."—Visited, 20th July 1920.

Baptism well

In the Churchyard by the road. Some reports suggest this was originally the site of the destroyed Holy well of the Church. It has also been used as a baptistry for total immersion as the well dimensions are eight feet six inches long by three feet wide and three feet six inches deep but restored and cemented before the visit in 1920 of the inspector Acc/ to the RCAM

Whereas we have received letters from the lords and others of Her Majesty's most honourable privy council to us and others directed whereby we are willed and required to inform ourselves of all places within this county of Pembroke where in times past there have been pilgrimages, images or offerings whereunto (as their lordships are informed) divers sorts of people do use to repair as well in the night season as other times of the day, and that in great numbers, and that we should cause those idolatrous and superstitious monuments to be pulled down, broken and quite defaced, so as there be no monument, token or memory remaining of the same, and likewise to take order that thereafter there be no such unlawful resort to these superstitious places, but to appoint some discreet and well affected persons to have an eye and regard to those that, notwithstanding this inhibition, shall repair to those places and to see them apprehended and brought before us to be severally punished for their disobedience and lewd behaviour.

Bronwydd MS. 3 f.85.

There is site of another holy well called Bishop's Well. This was in a field near Houghton School and there is reference to another one but no traces exist.

Causeway Meadow

There is also a field North east of Houghton which had the name Causeway Meadow . This name is recorded in the early 1800 and would have been a traditional name then but there is now no evidence visible of a causeway.

Nonconformist Churches

Baptists

Galilee Chapel built 1831 in the part of Langum which is in the Burton Parish It was a branch of Sardis Chapel Burton and had in 1840 about 40 members although the return for 1851 would suggest that the average attendance was 280. The records for 1820 to 1836 are held in the Public Records Office London. In Robert's details of the founding of this Church he describes the houses of the area as being little cottages some squatty in appearance clean and homely with earthen floors and thatched roofs

Sardis -- This was began in 1816 at Hook Quay by a Home Missionary called J H Thomas . The Chapel was built in 1822 near Southland Burton and had 50 members in 1840. J H Thomas was the minister from 1816 till 1829. In 1837 it joined with Horeb Johnston Parish. In 1851 the return was signed by Henry James Morgan as Minister of Front St. Pembroke Dock services were held alternately mornings one week afternoons the next and it was recorded that the congregation was a very scattered one and attendance's depended on the weather.

Calvinistic Methodists

This cause began in about 1850 at a home near Burton Village and formed into a Church in 1865. According to the census of 1851 services were held in the Burton School Room with an average congregation of 45 and the Minister was John Davies of Mead Lodge Pembroke. The Chapel was built in 1884 as a branch of Gershom Pembroke Dock and later had connections with Neyland.
Wesleyan Methodists

John Wesley preached in the area several times and a cause was formed about 1810 with the Chapel at Hearsen Mountain (Hill Mountain) being erected in 1815. It was part of the Haverfordwest circuit and the records of this Chapel are held in the Pembrokeshire Records Office as part of the Haverfordwest and Neyland Circuit records. In 1850 it had 50 members and the Deacon was William Esmond.

Rhoos Ferry (Burton/Pembroke Ferry)

The first record of this which is the north landing point of the Pembroke Ferry was in the charter of Pembroke granted to Pembroke by Henry II in 1154 – This charter is believed to have been a repeat of the charter granted by Henry I in 1100.

The ferry was worth over £26 per year to the Earl of Pembroke in 1330 and operated from Pembroke Ferry to Burton until the early 1890s.

The horse ferry had been used by John Wesley when journeying between Haverfordwest and Pembroke. On 2nd August 1771 after riding from Haverfordwest, in his Journal he writes 'I preached at Houghton to a lovely congregation of plain artless people.' On 21st August 1772 after riding from Haverfordwest he notes, 'the water men were in no haste to fetch us over so I sat on a convenient stone and finished the little tract that I had in hand.' It is said that the stone still exists at the Jolly Sailor Inn. On 19th July 1777 he again preached at Houghton, on his journey between Haverfordwest and Pembroke. In 1781 there were four members of the Wesleyan fraternity at Houghton.

Main road

The Main road to Haverfordwest from Pembroke would have probably been poor before the Highways Act of 1555 the responsibility for road maintenance lay with the Lord of the manor who cast this obligation on his tenants. After 1655 and until 1835 the maintenance of the roads became the responsibility of each parish and was carried out under the direction of the surveyor appointed annually (with the overseers and constable) at the vestry meeting. The duty was compulsory on all able-bodied men who were required to work for six days a year on road repairs or to provide team labour for the same period. The road must be 9 feet wide. It was not until 1925 that the road from Burton to Haverfordwest was tarmaced.

In 1788 due to the importance of the road a number of prominent landowners made application for a turnpike trust to be created giving the trustees power to levy tolls on users of the highway, the proceeds being applied to maintenance, under the supervision of a surveyor appointed by them although the right to call upon parishioners to give six days labour or provide six days team labour still existed. One of the toll houses was opposite the Stable Bar. This was destroyed on 3rd August 1843 by the Rebecca rioters and was rebuilt during 1844.

Benton Castle.

On a steep cliff above the western banks of the Cleddau. A small medieval Castle which has been ruinous and deserted for many centuries. Little of its history is known. Like many such buildings it had its ghost as shown by the letter written on 22 December 1693 from Nicholas Roberts of St Davids to Edward Llwyd - "Benton Castle, formerly said to be haunted, upon which account seldom visited, where they say the Devil would often appear in the shape of a black mastiff dog, and sometimes lie by the fire, but mostly in a vault or cellar, to guard some hidden treasure there."

recorded that 'in plan it comprehends a very small court of irregular figure, at the south -west angle of which rises a small cylindrical tower of three floors surmounted by an octagonal battlement probably of somewhat later date of which each face contains one embrasure, whose ruined coping is the only trace of cut stone in the building (this feature had disappeared by 1920) The walls are thick, the floors have been of timber, there appear to have been no fireplaces and there are no stairs in the tower wall, so access to each floor was probably by ladders and trap doors. The doorway had a pointed arch but no trace of a portcullis. Appended to its west side is a square projection which rises to the summit and contains garderobes for the two upper floors. From these a shaft descends to the foot of the tower and opens upon the ditch. The lower stage is lighted by loops, one of which commands the Castle entrance. Above are some small coupled windows. A door on the east side opens from the first floor upon a short and low curtain nine feet thick with battlements and a rear wall, which is pierced by the main gateway of the place a narrow and pointed arch without trace of portcullis or gatehouse. At the east end of this curtain is a second and smaller tower much ruined and from this the curtain seems to be extended round the court. Only traces of the wall remain but drawings of the 18c show a sort of tower or building on the north side of which traces remain and there is an arch of which may have been a postern. Below the Castle towards the walls is a small court or paddock defended by an earthwork and no doubt intended for the pasture of cattle in times of danger. The defense of this paddock passed all round the Castle'.

The author, R. M. Lockley in Pembrokeshire 1977, p. 121, states that the Castle "was uninhabited from the time of its reduction by Cromwell until about 1930 when its reconstruction was undertaken by a genial hermit Ernest Pegge, who with his own hands lovingly rebuilt it, using the rock tumbled from its walls by time and Cromwellian cannons, and oak beams from the shipbreakers' yards at Milford Haven" "Many a happy hour have I spent with Ernest Pegge, a surprising but sane man and contented as he worked in and about his Castle in the lovely wooded estuary. He placed his own mark in concrete over the entrance to the renovated Castle". After World War II it was the home of the late Colonel J. A. Sullivan, High Sheriff of Dyfed in 1974.

An ancient mansion, renamed Ashdale in the period 1845-50 by the then owner-occupier George Lort Phillips, later of Lawrenny. The property is at the northern end of the parish, about half a mile from Langwm on the Eastern Cleddau. From the reign of Henry VII it was the home of the Jordan family, also settled at Jordanston (in Llanstadwell), Honeyborough, Hayston, Neeston, Barrett's Hill, Berllan (in Cemaes), Haverfordwest.

John Jordan of DumpleDale was assessed at four hearths in 1670. The family arms were; Ardent a chevron between 3 greyhounds courant gales. The last of the male line at DumpleDale was the Revd. John Jordan M.A. Jesus College, Oxon.). JP, who died without issue on 27 April 1808, aged 59. Later in the 19th century DumpleDale was sold to George Lort Phillips, who made alterations to the house, described in 1840 by Lewis as 'a handsome modern mansion'. It changed hands several times after the Lort-Phillips occupation and was bought in 1973 by Mr. William Lees of Haverfordwest who repaired and improved the house. A Sale Catalogue of 1983 describes Ashdale as of two storeys with range of five windows, and an attic storey with three (modern) dormer windows, six bedrooms, three reception rooms, kitchen: the present courtyard at the rear was formerly part of the domestic quarters, and was once a north wing which accommodated the principal rooms. Today it is called Ashdale, but the old name is perpetuated in the name of an adjoining farm, Little Dumple Dale.

Milton.(Burton) .

Formerly a residence, one and a quarter miles north-west of the parish Church; it is now a farm. The earliest known family there was that of Wogan.

Richard Wogan of Milton married Maud Philipps of Picton Castle. He died without issue, and his widow then married Morgan Jones who was of Milton when he was High Sheriff in 1547 Morgan predeceased Maud and was followed at Milton by his son William Jones, gent.

William died in 1577, and his will mentions his brother Thomas Jones of Harmeston, his son Henry Jones, a minor, and his mother Mrs. Maud Philipps Wogan, gentlewoman, who proved the will. Little else is known of Milton, and it was let to farmers. The owner in 1786 was David Hughes esq.. (of Harmeston), and Richard Fields as tenant.

Williamston. (Burton)

Home of the Bowen and Scourfield families. Fenton described it as an 'old baronial residence' and it was certainly at one time an Elizabethan manor house. He goes on 'Williamston, where for many years a family of the name of Bowen, an offset from the family tree at Upton, flourished, but which is now the residence of the Revd. Dr. John Philipps. This house I conceive to have sprung up in consequence of Benton Castle being abandoned as a habitation from the thorough change in the state of the country and the modes of life. The land at its back, between it and the Haven, was in Queen Elizabeth's time noted as a park having deer, an addition it still retains, together with a very parkish appearance'. There are, in fact, two houses joined together.

William Bowen was High Sheriff in 1761.

Other owners who served in this office were John Henry Philipps (1833) and Sir Owen Scourfield (1881). Colonel Owen Philipps of Williamston (Pembrokeshire Militia) inherited Williamston through his wife Janet Bowen, daughter of Thomas Bowen. He married Anne Elizabeth daughter of Henry Scourfield of moat. Their son, John Philipps (b. 1808), assumed the name of Scourfield and inherited the property. He was created a baronet by Disraeli in 1876 and married Augusta Lort Phillips of Lawrenny Park. A prominent Tory politician he in later life became a recluse who imagined himself to be a pauper. His son, Sir Owen Scourfield, 2nd Baronet died without issue and the title became extinct. Sir Owen, by all accounts, was also something of an eccentric. He was over generous to the poor and whenever he visited Haverfordwest handed out coins galore to the populace. He had a passion for steam trains.

A few years ago this handsome mansion was bought by Mr. Richard Fairclough, a trained Nurse and psychologist. He converted the house into a nursing home but put it up for sale in 1989 begun in 1968 was not completed until seven years later. A section of the box girder construction collapsed in 1970 and work was suspended into that type of construction for a period.

The bodies of several young sailors wrapped in their hammocks were discovered buried in the mud near the site of the Cleddeau bridge. It is thought they were victims of bubonic plague and could have been buried secretly to avoid the ship being quarantined. One had a coin of 1650 on him – is it a coincidence that Haverfordwest was visited by the bubonic plague in 1651. As was Llanstadwell

Value of the living of Burton £50 acc to a History of Rosemarket Church by Geoffrey Nicolle

Topographical Dictionary of Wales Lewis 1834 -

Burton, a parish in the hundred of Rhos, county of Pembroke, South Wales, 3 miles (North.) from Pembroke, on the road from that town to Haverfordwest via Burton Ferry, containing 694 inhabitants.

This Parish is situated on Milford Haven, and abounds with scenery in every part interesting and occasionally picturesque. Among the most interesting objects in the vicinity are the remains of Benton Castle, on the western shore of the Haven, probably erected by some of the Normans, as a border fortress for the protection of the territory which they had acquired on this part of the coast. It does not appear to have been originally of very great extent; and the present ruins, which, from their situation on the margin of an estuary of Milford Haven, have a truly picturesque appearance, consist principally of a lofty round tower, which, rising above the thriving plantations in the vicinity, forms a conspicuous feature in the landscape.

The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of St David's, rated in the King's Books at £ 15. 12s. 11d., and in the patronage of Earl Cawdor for two turns, and Sir John Owen, Bart., for one; Earl Cawdor presented at the last vacancy, and has also the next presentation,

A handsome and commodious parsonage-house was erected by the Rev. D. Bird Allen, the late incumbent. There are two places of worship for Baptists, and one for Wesleyan Methodists. Some trifling benefactions have been made for distribution among the poor of which the principal is a rent-charge of £3, bequeathed by Mr. Morgan Owen, in 1776, which is annually divided among six poor men and women, in portions of ten shillings each. Burton Ferry, which is also called Pembroke Ferry, is held under the crown. The average annual expenditure for the support of the poor is £ 10. 1s.

The State of Education in Wales – Parish Of Burton 1847

Of the three principal proprietors in this parish, one is resident, J. H. Philipps, esq., of Williamston. who has built, and for the most part maintains at his own expense, the school next reported.

Of the schools in this parish, the Church Sunday school, and the branch Sunday School from Gershom, are held in Burton village.

Burton National School.—I visited this school on the 9th of January, in company with the promoter. He receives in subscriptions and school-pence £24. 17s. 9d. per annum; the rest of the expenses (£26 18s 1d.) he pays himself. The school-house is a substantial and handsome building recently erected, and in perfect repair. The school-room is adequately furnished with cards, maps, boards, and a gallery. It is well lighted and ventilated. The apparatus comprised a large map of England and Wales, maps of the British Isles blank and filled, a map illustrating geographical definitions, three maps of Palestine, the travels of St. Paul and a table of chronology, besides cards for reading and spelling, and texts of Scripture on the walls. A mistress attends daily to teach the girls sewing, and receives £6. 6s. per annum for her services

I saw the master, who appeared intelligent; but the scholars were at home for their Christmas holidays at the time of my visit. So far as I could judge the school seemed to be made really efficient; and it was commonly spoken of as one of the best schools in the country.

Galilee Chapel Sunday school—

This Sunday-school belongs to the Baptists, and is held in their Chapel, on Sunday mornings and afternoons, alternately. I was informed by the superintendent that the attendance is much less these last months than it was some time ago. The scholars are all under fifteen years of age, except one. I found four elementary and three Scripture classes present. The elementary classes are taught principally by the individual mode, and the Scripture classes collectively. The Bible class Read the 37th chapter of Isaiah tolerably well; the class consisted of seven lads, varying in age from ten to fourteen. They could answer hardly any questions.

Another class of boys from seven to nine years of age read a part of the 6th chapter of St. John, fairly. To questions proposed by the superintendent they said, Jesus Christ is the Son of God; he is the Son of Man too; he was born in Bethlehem, in a stable; no room for him in the inn; the Virgin Mary was his mother, Joseph the carpenter his reputed father; he was laid in the manger.

A class of females from seven to eleven years old Read the 16th chapter of St. Luke, but they could answer no questions from the chapter Read. The superintendent desired the books to be taken up, and, to questions put (by him) to the whole school, it was said that John the Baptist was the son of Zachariah, and (by me) was born six months before Christ; (by the superintendent) was his forerunner; came to prepare the way before him. Jesus Christ was born of the Virgin Mary; she was a descendant of King David- A star appeared in the heavens when he was born, (by me) directing the wise men from the East to the place where he was; an angel from heaven also told about his birth to the shepherds. Jesus Christ preached the gospel; healed the man with the palsy; opened the eyes of the blind; raised Lazarus and the son or the widow of Nain from the dead; he was betrayed by Judas; was crucified by the Jews; is the only Saviour. A verse was sung, and the school was concluded with prayer by a member of the Church of England, who came in to school while the superintendent was proposing the general questions. Caldey

Caldey Island is listed as being under Penally Parish

Caldey Island is famous for the Monastery and Monks who have lived there. However, the history of human occupation on the island goes back much further. Flints, blades and penknife points have been found in caves on Caldey Island, indicating that humans occupied the area 12,000 years ago. However, at that time the sea level was lower, so the coastline would have been further out and Caldey Island would have been a Hill in the Bristol Channel plain. The island was also occupied during later periods, and Stone Age bones have been analysed to investigate what people were eating. The Mesolithic bones suggest a very high sea diet - up to 70% of the diet - but by the Neolithic time, they were not eating fish. This provides strong evidence that the transition from hunting and gathering to farming happened quickly - possibly within a hundred years. However, it is not clear whether farming was brought in by people from other parts of Britain and the continent or whether it was adopted in the Neolithic age by local people.

Island is the natural breakwater for Tenby harbour - about 450 acres consist of highly productive land and there are about 100 acres of foreshore.

It has been called the Island of Saints. As early as the 6c, if not before, it was the site of a Monastery reputed to be an offshoot of the famous one at Llantwit Major - Archbishop Dubricius, (a descendant of the Roman Emperor Maximus[383-8] was said to spend Lent on the island and on the death of Abbot Piro or Pyr (the first Abbot) in 521AD he appointed a monk named Samson as the new Abbot. For a time St David, St Dyfrig, Gildas, Maglorius, Paul de Leor and Illtyd dwelt upon the island.

From the 12 to the 15c it belonged to the Benedictines of the congregation of Tiron. Upon the dissolution of the Monasteries in the reign of Henry VIII it passed into secular hands. In 1906 it became the property of an Anglican Benedictine community which was received into the Church of Rome in 1912 and in 1928 it was sold to the monks of the Cistercian Order from Chimay, Belgium. The Monastery (the Abbey of St Samson) is the principal building on the Island.

The village Church is a small and very plain building possibly of Celtic Foundation. The old monastic buildings (St Illtyds Priory) date from the 13c. An interesting relic is an Ogham stone containing two inscriptions and dating from the 6th or 8th century.

Viking name of Caldy meaning Cold Island. Old name Ynys Pyr (the island of Pyr) probably from the first abbot.

It is 2 1/2 miles south of Tenby and is one and a half miles Long by two thirds of a mile wide 500 acres approx and is one of the few places in the UK where the Mediterranean snail Felix pisana can be found.

Caldy Abbey

1113 island given by Henry 1 to Martin de Tours, who gave it to his mother who handed the island over to the Benedictine abbey of St Dogmaels in 12c. Remained a priory of 12 monks until the Reformation. In 1500 the Priory had an income of under £100 or less than 6 religious.

When it was dissolved 1535 the land was granted by Henry VIII to John Bradshaw of Presteign whose family held it till 1612 after which it passed through many hands

In 1897 Rev. W Done Bushell, chaplain of Harrow school bought it. Restored Priory Church and St Davids Church (parish Church of the island built by the Benedictine monks 12c). East window in priory Church is a memorial to his work.

1906 island sold to Benedictine Monks of the Church of England who did much building and restoration work.

1913 their Abbot and most of the monks went over to the Church of Rome.

They moved in 1928 to Prinknash Abbey and the island was sold to the Cistercians. The stain glass window of St Illtud in the south wall of the nave of the old priory Church is by Dom Theodore Baily a Benedictine monk.

Interior of the Abbey was gutted by fire in 1940 and rebuilt ten years later, Coates Carter architect. The Church of St Illtyd claims to be the oldest British Church now in Roman Catholic hands. A memorial stone from 6 or 8c and has Latin and Ogham inscriptions crosses on its faces and in Ogham it says MAG---DUDR---INB; parts of the inscription are broken off. The Latin Inscription is AT SINGNO CRUCIS IN ILLAM FINGSI ROGO OMNIBUS AMBULANTIBUS IBI EXORENT PRO ANIMAE CATUOCONI {AND BY THE SIGN OF THE CROSS WHICH I HAVE FASHIONED UPON THIS STONE I ASK ALL WHO WALK THERE THAT THEY PRAY FOR THE SOUL OF CATUONCONUS}.

It is feasible that the inscription refers to the servant of Dubricius - meaning Piro. In about 750ad a cross and a latin inscription were added. The stone was discovered in the ruins of the priory in the 19c and then used to form the lintel for a window, later it was used for a garden seat.

St Dubricius (Dyfrig) set up the first Monastery and Piro was appointed abbot. He is reputed to have enjoyed a drink or two and one night in about 520 AD he had one too many and on returning to his cell in a state of drunkenness he fell into the Monastery well. When his fellow monks pulled him out they found he had drowned. In spite or may be because of this, he was still regarded as a saint. Samson was then appointed as Piro's successor. He tried in vain to curb the monks drinking habits. Finally, defeated, by problems of discipline he left Caldy and retired with some of the more temperate monks to Stackpole where they took over an abandoned camp - and Samson settled in a cave in the side of the headland.

The caves on the island were once inhabited in the Old Stone Age, one was Nanna's Cave. During quarrying many artefacts have been found including flint tools, animal remains and evidence of Middle Stone Age flint "factory". There is also a Bronze Age burial mound.

More recently, in 1780s John Paul Jones the American privateer is reputed to have repeatedly "watered" his frigate "Ranger" at Caldy Island.

St Margarets island only 2 acres in extent was broken off from Caldey by great storms about 1530; it has some remains of old buildings, probably monastic, which were converted into cottages for quarrymen during the last century.

A Topographical Dictionary of Wales Lewis 1839

Caldey Island, the principal of a cluster of insulated rocks in the bay of Tenby, and forming an extra-parochial district, in the hundred of Castlemartin, county of Pembroke, South Wales, 2 miles (E.) from the main land: the population is returned with the parish of Penally. This island, of which the ancient British name is Ynys Pyr, is about one mile and a quarter in length, and half a mile in breadth, and comprises upwards of 600 acres of land, lying on a bed of limestone, something more than half being in a state of cultivation. Owen, speaking of the fertility of the spot, describes it as abounding with corn; but he adds that "all their ploughs goe with horses, for oxen the inhabitants dare not keepe, fearing the purveyors of the pirattes, as they themselves told me." There are some large limestone quarries. Robert, son of Martin de Tours, founded a priory here in the reign of Henry I., which he dedicated to St. Mary, and made a cell to the abbey of Dogmael, to which establishment the whole of the island was granted by his mother. Its revenue, at the Dissolution, was £5. 10. 11. The remains have been mostly converted into offices attached to a mansion erected on part of the site, now belonging to the proprietor of the island. Among them is the tower of the ancient conventual Church, which is surmounted by a stone spire, and forms a conspicuous object of picturesque appearance, imparting, with the rest of the ruins, an interesting and romantic character to this sequestered spot. An ancient Chapel, about a quarter of a mile from the priory, was repaired a few years ago, and service is performed in it when any Clergyman crosses from the main land for the purpose. A lighthouse, with a steady light, has been erected on the island, which is of great service to vessels entering Tenby harbour, distant about three miles.

An Island of the Saints Arch Camb 1908

By the Rev. W. Done Bushell, M.A., F.S.A.

A LITTLE to the south of Tenby lies a Long low island, whose monotonous outline gives but little indication to the casual observer of the rich store of interest and of beauty which it contains. It is the Isle of Caldey, known of old as Ynys-y-Pyr, and rich, in spite of all appearances, as well in natural beauty as in Hallowed; memories. Encircled also as it is, at least in summer time, by a calm and boundless sea, blue with a blueness which recalls the Riviera or the Italian Lakes, and severed by it from the madding crowd, it seems to be especially fitted for a home for those who deem that they are called to live the quiet life with God. And hence perhaps it is that the traditions of the island are, as a matter of fact, monastic; that there were Celtic monks upon it in the early centuries, and Norman monks in later times; that there are Benedictine brothers still, though in obedience now to Canterbury, not to Rome; maintaining, each community in turn, their solemn round of praise and prayer.

The islands — for if we include St. Margaret's there are two— are separated from the mainland by a sound or channel of about two-thirds of a mile in breadth, and of an average depth of about 40 ft. at low, and 65 ft. at high spring tides. Now, south of Milford Haven, Pembrokeshire consists of a peninsula built up of mountain limestone and of old red sandstone, in alternate bands, whose trend is west-north-west and east-south-east ; and two such bands are represented on these islands, the mountain limestone to the north, the old red sandstone to the south. The larger island is about a mile and a-half in length from east to west, and about two-thirds of a mile in breadth from north to south ; and, amongst other noticeable features of geological and pre-historic interest, there is on it a good raised beach ; and, in caves now quarried away, the well-known Rev. G. N. Smith, of Gumfreston, and Professor Boyd Dawkins found many Pleistocene bones; the former also came upon a number of Neolithic human bones, with the remains of fish, dog, sheep or goat, and cattle, which are now in the Tenby Museum; whilst in September last some early burials and a kitchen-midden were found in Priory Bay. The water supply is excellent.

(Roman Coins)

It is said (see Cambrian Journal 1855) that coins of Constantine the Great, of Constans, and of Carausius, have been found upon St. Margaret's; the earliest written records, however, date from the sixth century. We gather from the lives of St. Paul de Leon, St Samson, and others, in the Acta Sanctorum and elsewhere, that in that century there was a Monastery on the island, which was in close connexion with the celebrated retreat at Llantwit in Glamorganshire. A writer who wrote the recently discovered life of St Paul de Leon in the year 884, expressly tells us that there was a certain island, Pyr by name, within the borders of Demetia, in which St. Illtyd spent much of his time and where he was associated with, amongst others, St Paul de Leon, St David, St Gildas, and St. Samson; and Pyr was most indubitably the former name of Caldey, as Giraldus and the deed of gift to St. Dogmaels amply testify. We Read much also of the island in the various lives of St. Samson, which are of considerable authority, being all derived from an original memoir by one Enoch, whose uncle was a near kinsman of the saint, and who had himself conversed with Anne, St. Samson's mother. We learn from them that the name of the first Abbot of Caldey was Piro, and that upon his death — he was unfortunately drowned — St. Samson was appointed to succeed him by the Archbishop Dubric, who was then upon the island, where indeed he usually spent the Lenten season.' And after his consecration St. Samson ruled the Monastery for about three years. These records show the ecclesiastical importance of the island in early times. Its importance was indeed so great that Professor Williams, of the Theological College, Bala, goes so far as to express an opinion that Caldey and not Llantwit was the original Llan-na Htuti (Some Aspects of the Christian Church in Wales, pp. 57, 58) ; but however this may be, and his view is hard to reconcile with what Enoch tells us in the almost contemporaneous life of St. Samson above referred to, it is certain that in the sixth century there was an important Monastery upon the island, representing probably the Eastern rather than the western type of Christianity, and closely bound up with the great names of Illtyd, Dubric, Samson, David, Paul and Gildas.

How long the Celtic monks remained upon the island is not known, but in the reign of Henry I it was, as Dugdale tells us, given by that Monarch to Robert, son of Martin, who gave it to his mother Geva, who in turn, with her son's assent, conveyed it to the celebrated Monastery of St. Dogmaels, a Benedictine house which followed the reformed rule, then lately introduced by St Bernard d'Abbeville at Tiron in the Diocese of chartres. The Priory, in consequence, became a cell of St. Dogmaels, and it so remained until the dissolution of the Monasteries, when the island, called in the grant The Manor of Calde, in the County of Pembroke, was, with St. Dogmaels, and various Church lands, aliened by the King to one John Bradshawe of Presteign The Bradshawes held it until 1612, when it was sold by the great-grandson of John Bradshawe of Presteign to Walter Philpin, Mayor of Tenby, and his son Griffith. In 1653 it passed by sale from the Philpin family to one Reeve Williams, of Lilanridian, and Robert Williams, of Loughor. In 1786, John Williams, a great-grandson of Reeve Williams, sold it to George Greville, Earl Brooke and Earl of Warwick, who again, in 1798, sold it to Thomas Kynaston, of Pembroke ; with the Kynaston family it remained until 1867, when it passed to James Wilson Hawksley, whose widow sold it in 1894 to Thomas Dick Smith - Cuninghame. From Mr. Smith - Cuninghame it passed in 1897 to the writer of the present article, who again sold it in 1906 to the Rev. Father Aelred, O.S.B. ; and it is now occupied by a community of Benedictine monks,

Caldey Island The Village Church, established under the authority of a charter given by the Archbishop of Canterbury in 1902.

It is a very primitive and simple building, bearing a conspicuous legend ; " Restored in the year of our Lord 1838, and in the first of Queen Victoria.' This record, indeed, does not seem very promising, but there is more behind.

The Church consists of a sacristy, a porch, a chancel, and a nave. Of these the sacristy is modern; and the porch which is not bonded to the west wall of the Church, is of uncertain date. Neglecting these, however, we find the ground plan of the western portion of the Church to be a square, whose side is 20 ft. internal measurement, the walls being 3 ft. thick. It is lighted by a large south window, deeply splayed internally, and also by a small round window over the western porch. This part of the Church may be regarded as the nave. The chancel also, if we may so apply the word, is a square of 18 ft. internal measurement, the north and west walls, which alone are old, being 3 ft. thick. The south and east walls of the chancel, with the roofs, are modern, dating from 1838 before which time the building was in a very ruinous condition, and was used, it is said, as a blacksmith's shop. Between the chancel and the nave an arch has very recently been brought to light, the jambs of which show, at a height of about 7 ft., two very simple imposts. The width of the opening is 8 ft. The arch was probably always round, as it is now; the old walls end, however, just above the imposts. There is also in the west wall of the nave a Norman doorway, which was discovered in 1907. It consists of a double arch, one with an opening of 68 ins., the other of 56 ins. The north wall of the chancel has in it a tall and narrow window of some 14 ins. opening, deeply splayed internally, and situated well towards the east.

Now such a configuration, with its heavy chancel archway, will, of course, remind us of the churches which we find in Gower and in Little England beyond Wales. But it is really very different from them. We must compare it rather with Flimston Chapel, further down the coast, which is a simple oblong 46 ft. by 24 ft., with the well-known St. Govan's Chapel, which is also a simple oblong 20 ft. by 12 ft., or with the Chapels near St Davids of St. Justinian and St. Nun, than with the parish churches on the mainland; there however at all events no other like it in the immediate neighbourhood. And it is well, perhaps, to remember what Mr. Petrie has to say of the early Irish churches (Petrie, Ecclesiastical Architecture of Ireland vol. i, p. 258) : "The smaller churches," he says, "are simple oblong quadrangles. In addition to this quadrangle the larger churches present a second oblong of smaller dimensions extending to the east, and constituting the chancel or sanctuary, in which the altar was placed, and which is connected with the nave by a triumphal arch of semicircular form." He goes on to speak of the cyclopean character of the walls. Now there is nothing which can be called Cyclopean about the walls of Caldey Church; indeed the Caldey limestone would not lend itself to any such Cyclopean work as we find across St. George's Channel; but none the less it will be seen that, as regards the ground plan of the Church, there is a full agreement with what Mr. Petrie tells us of the ancient Irish edifices. The western doorway, then, of the Church being Norman, and the ground plan of a very primitive type indeed, we may perhaps be bold to hazard a conjecture that the building may have been erected in the course of the twelfth century, either when the island came into the hands of Martin of Tiron, or when it had been transferred to those of St. Dogmaels Abbey, and that it may have been erected on the lines of an earlier Celtic Church, of which some vestiges may possibly even now remain in the lower portions of the old walls.

Caldey Stone

But whether the island Church shows traces of a Celtic origin or not, there is in the well-known Caldey stone an undeniable relic of the Celtic monks. This stone has been so fully described in various numbers of the Archaeological Camhrensia that it would not be necessary to say more about it were it not that the accepted reading of the Latin legend has recently been challenged by Mr. F. C. Burkitt. But, this being so, it will be well to add a few more words concerning it.

The Caldey stone then is a block of sandstone with an incised cross, a Latin inscription below it, and an Ogam inscription round the edge ; there is also a cross on the back, and a small cross on either edge. The Latin inscription is in debased Roman lettering. A portion of the stone has long been broken off, and one of the smaller crosses comes in the way of the Ogam.

The remaining letters, however, of the Ogam as deciphered by Sir John Rhys, are MAOL DUBR, which appear to stand for MAGua DUBHacuna, or the (tonsured) servant of Dubricius. See Arch, Camb., 5th viii, 98

The Latin inscription is translated by Sir John Rhys as: And I have provided it with a cross; I ask all who walk in this place to pray for the soul of Cadwgan.

He would indeed be a bold man who would dare to challenge the deliberately expressed opinion of Sir John Rhys; it is right, however, to add that whilst the eminent professor was engaged upon his scrutiny, a messenger came to inform him that the waves were rising rapidly and that he must hurry away. He therefore himself suggests that a good photograph should be taken, with a view presumably to further investigation.

Professor Burkitt had, however, the opportunity of spending a longer time upon the island, and, in a paper Read by him on June 7th, 1904, before the Cambridge Philological Society {Proceedings, lxvii, p. 6), he declines to accept the usual transliteration of the first five words as given by Sir John Rhys and others as

With the sign of the Cross of Jesus, I, Iltyd, have fashioned (this monument).

Fenton, writing in 1811, tells us that the stone was dug up in the ruins of the Priory "many years ago"; and it appears to have been used successively as a lintel to a window, and as a garden seat. The exact spot where it was found is said to have been in front of the blacksmith's shop which once stood east of the well. It is now in the Priory Chapel. The late Professor Westwood looked upon the Latin legend as not later than the ninth, and possibly as early as the seventh century. Professor Burkitt, however, sees no valid palaeographical reason to prevent our assigning it to the first part of the sixth century, at which time, as we know; St. Dubric and St. Illtyd were both closely connected with the island.

Caldy Island Norman Priory

We now pass to a consideration of the buildings of the Norman Priory. These consisted of a very simple cloister-garth, surrounded in the usual way by Church, guest-house, refectory, and calefactory or kitchen, with dormitories upon the upper floors. All these monastic buildings still remain. They were arranged according to the usual Benedictine plan, with the exception that the Chapel was upon the south, and not, as was more usual, on the north side of the garth; the entrance porch, however, reminds us of what we find in Norman castles on the mainland rather than of a Monastery gate. The entrance was commanded also by a loopholed staircase on the east side of the garth.

A very special feature of the Monastery is the so-called Abbot's Tower, which is a battlemented fortalice of military type. It is a rectangular structure, nearly square, the internal measurements being 18 ft. and 15 ft. respectively; and the walls being 4 ft. thick. This tower appears to have been originally meant to stand alone.

Now it will be remembered that the island was for a time in the possession of Robert Fitzmartin. It is, therefore, not improbable that he may have built it for his own protection, and that it was only afterwards that it was incorporated in the monastic buildings. If so, it would be of course the oldest part of the Priory. It consists of a vaulted basement, with a chamber over it, the entrance to the basement being at the south-west corner. The way in which the upper chamber was reached is not so clear. It may have been by a staircase in a loop-holed turret still existing at the north-east corner. No trace, however, of steps is to be seen, and in monastic times the upper story of this turret became a garde-robe. If there be any difference of age in the remaining parts of the Monastery, those to the east, that is to say the dormitory, the calefactory or kitchen, and the sanctuary, seem to claim priority.

The narthex, choir, and sanctuary are, as has been ready said, upon the south side of the cloister-garth and form a Church of 73 ft in external length. The sanctuary, which has a pointed barrel-vault, is, however, cut off from the other portions of the Chapel by a wall, in which no trace of an original arch or opening is to be found. This wall may, however, have been rebuilt: it is not easy to date these simple limestone structures.

The north and south walls of the sanctuary are 36 ins., and the east and west walls 30 ins. thick. At the western end of the Church there is a tower, some 30 ft. in height, surmounted by a rude stone spire of 18 ft. This tower stands on a base which is 12 ft. square, and has fallen westwards out of the perpendicular to the extent of 40 ins. The breadth of the nave is 18 ft. externally, but was originally 20 ft. or more, the present north wall being modern. The western window dates from the fourteenth century, but may have been a later insertion. Such insertions are common enough in the south of Pembrokeshire. At all events the eastern end of the Chapel buildings seems to be of an earlier date. The splays and the Hood-moulding of the old east window still remain; a portion also of the external drip-stone is intact. It is not clear, however, how the opening was filled. The tracery, if any, has long since perished: it may not improbably have been a double lancet.

Upon the west side of the cloister-garth there is a guest-house, which includes a spacious porch, an adjoining chamber, probably used for storage, and a chamber overhead, which may at one time have been divided into two. The basement of the guest-house measures 27 ft. by 16 ft. There is a so-called Flemish chimney, and the remains of two good windows looking on to the garth. Upon the inner wall, towards the garth, are pigeon-holes.

Upon the north side of the cloister-garth is the refectory. It is now used as a kitchen, and is 27 ft. square. In Fenton's time it possessed a "very curious arched roof," but this has long since disappeared. Above it is a chamber of the same dimensions, now divided into two. Upon the east side of the cloister garth there is what is now a scullery, with vaulted barrel roof, once used presumably as calefactory or kitchen, containing as it does the huge monastic chimney; whilst over it there is the dormitory, to which access is afforded by a staircase in the thickness of the east wall of the garth, furnished with loop-holes which command the entrance gateway.

At the north-east corner of the garth is the square embattled tower described above, the upper chamber of which was in monastic times the Priors lodging, whilst the little loop-holed turret to the north-east was his garde-robe. There is, as was the universal custom in the Benedictine houses, an access for the Prior from his lodging to the dormitory, which enabled him not only to maintain due discipline, but, as his duty was, to call his monks for their night office. There is some reason also to believe that there was a direct descent from the dormitory to the Chapel.

The burial-ground, where bones are still to be found in plenty beneath the surface of the soil, lay to the south of the great Church. The buildings were clearly planned with a view to defence. Sea-robbers abounded in mediaeval times. St David was sacked in 1088; Tenby was burnt by Maelgwn in 1186; and in much later times the Caldey islanders were forced to plough with horses, rather than with oxen as on the mainland, lest oxen should tempt the rovers' appetites. Above the sanctuary there is a room of uncertain date, and in the south wall of the Chapel a piscina; and there is also a lamp stead, that is to say a shelf to carry a flare, with a chimney over it constructed in the thickness of the wall. As will be seen from the plan, the walls of the Abbot's Tower, and of the calefactory or kitchen, are from 4 ft. to 4 ½ ft., those of the sanctuary from 3 ft. to 3 ½ ft., and the remainder for the most part about 2 ½ ft. thick; and we may possibly be justified if we infer accordingly the order in which they were built.

Such are the Priory buildings, which are as complete as they are primitive, and yet have not been noticed in detail by any writer with whose works I am acquainted; the reason being probably that until recent years the island was not very accessible, and also that they were themselves obscured by various buildings which have now been taken down, and were in use for various other purposes than those for which they had originally been designed; and, further, that they were encased in innumerable coats of whitewash and plaster. Indeed, in 1898, when the island came into the possession of the present writer, the sanctuary was a laundry, the choir a disused maltkiln, the entrance-porch a lime-store, and the guest-house a pigeon loft; the dormitory was divided into bedrooms for the servants, and in the narthex were stored many hundreds of old bottles.

The only other monument of much importance on the larger island is the round tower, now an oratory, which overlooks the Caldey roads. This tower is circular in shape; its walls are of great thickness; and it was probably erected by the Norman monks to keep an eye upon the vessels casting anchor in the roads, which for the most part would be hidden from the Monastery by the cliffs. The thickness of the walls would enable it with ease to resist a casual attack.

We are also told on good authority that where the lighthouse stands there was a Chapel of the blessed Virgin. This is referred to by William of Worcester, in an itinerary written about 1490, as "Capella Sancte Marie super maris litus" and it is also mentioned by Lewis Morris in 1748 in his Plans of Harbours, Bars, etc. No trace of it now remains.

It will be well to refer to the Archaeology Cambrensis 4th Ser., i, 122, for a full description of an alabaster reliquary found by Mr. Corbet Kynaston, then "King of Caldey" in a fissure at the High Cliff Quarries, some seventy years ago, whilst digging out a wild cat which had taken refuge there; this reliquary was restored to the Priory Chapel by Mrs. Bridger, a relative of Mr. Kynaston, in 1901. It is in shape an altar tomb 8 ins. long, with a vertical section of 2 ins. square, and is surmounted by a recumbent figure which has not at present been identified.

We find on the adjacent island of St. Margaret. There are there certain ecclesiastical remains; but in the nineteenth century they were converted into cottages for quarrymen, so that they are now not easy to interpret, nor can we assign a date to them. The western chamber has, however, in its doorway and interior corbels some faint indications of departed splendour ; and one of Norris' sketches, to be seen in the Free Library at Cardiff, shows in the chamber marked " Refectory," a traceried window of some pretensions.

There are also two round chimneys, one of which appears to be old, one new. These buildings probably bore to the Norman Priory somewhat the same relation which the Priory itself bore to the mother house of St. Dogmaels. It was, in fact, a cell.

Nooks And Corners Of Pembrokeshire . H. Thornhill Timmins 1895

The day waxing warm and sunny we now make for the harbour again, and charter one of the numerous well-found pleasure-boats which lie in wait for visitors. An hour's pleasant sail over a sea ladyblue as the Mediterranean, and we land upon the shores of Caldey Island, like the Old Man of the Sea, pick-a-back fashion astride the boatman's back.

' This island,' says George Owen, ' is verie fertile and yeldeth plentie of corne ; all their plowes goe with horses, for oxen the inhabitantes dare not keepe, fearing the purveyors of the pirattes as they themselves told me, whoe often make their provisions there by theire owne comission, and comonlie to the good contentment of the inhabitantes, when conscionable theefes arrive there.'

A grassy track, winding up the sloping bank amidst gorse and bracken, now leads across a stream and beside a few quarrymen's cottages to a dejected-looking Chapel. In a neglected corner of the interior we discover the object of our visit — to wit, a recumbent oblong stone inscribed with certain archaic characters, which have been rendered as follows: 'In the Name both of the Cross itself and of Him who was fixed thereon, pray for the soul of Catuoconus.' Certain lines of the character known as Ogham may also be discerned upon the sides or edges of this hoary monolith.

Striking across the open fields, with the tall white lighthouse for our guide, we turn aside to visit an old farmstead that contains the scanty ruins of Caldey Priory. This venerable foundation owes its origin to Robert, son of Martin de Turribus, and was annexed as a cell to the abbey of St. Dogmaels, near Cardigan. A wise old saw which observes ' There is nothing new but what has been forgotten,' may find a verification amidst such neglected nooks as these ; whose long-forgotten relics of a bygone age greet the wayfarer with all the charm of novelty. Timmins

Above the adjacent farmyard premises rises the quaint little weather-beaten tower of the old priory Chapel ; its slender spire leaning perilously awry, its stonework fast crumbling to decay. From the summit of the tower hangs the crazy Bell, with rusty chain and silent clapper. One daintily-fashioned window is roughly blocked with brickwork, another gives entrance to a pigeon-cot.

Within the adjoining house we are shown a fine old vaulted kitchen, with deep-browed windows, and rude stone settle along the wall. Thence we penetrate to a cool, dark chamber exhibiting traces of a gracefully proportioned window enclosed by a pointed arch, long since blocked up.

Retracing our steps beneath hedges of flowering fuchsia, we return by breezy, fern-clad commons and well-tilled fields to the landing-place; where an amphibious-looking individual is laying out lobster-pots among the weed-strewn rocks.

The Benedictine Priory on Caldey Island 1909 (Edwards, Emily Hewlett Castles and strongholds of Pembrokeshire Tenby 1909)

Caldey owes great charm to its sea-girt isolation. The Priory rough archaic buildings, cobbled cloister-garth, rude spire, gatehouse and porter's lodge, winding stair lighted with narrow loop holes, whence the monks reached their dormitories, impress the mind with a sense of religious seclusion.

The Rev. Done bushel, F.S.A., during an occupation of many years, studied the buildings exhaustively, and considers them to remain almost complete. The outer walls were once lighted only by loops for defence, the East window of the chancel being an exception ; calefactory, dormitory, old kitchen and Prior's chamber still exist. In the chancel of the Priory-Church Celtic influence is shown by rough vaulting of similar construction, perhaps, to the Early Irish island Chapels; in the chancel, too, is a rude chimney for carrying away the smoke from flaring lamp-lights. The interesting alabaster reliquary in the Chapel was found buried in the cliffs.

The old name for Caldey was Inys Pyrr. There is mention of St. Samson in connection with the island, while an Ogam stone gives evidence of Christian occupation so early as the 8th century; about 1100 Caldey was given to St. Dogmaels, and continued an appenage of that abbey until the Dissolution of Monasteries.

The island was so harried by pirates even in Elizabeth's reign that the inhabitants were unable to use oxen ; Jones' Bay claims acquaintance with Paul Jones, the celebrated privateer. English Benedictines now sing the orisons of the old Black Monks on Caldey Island.

RCAM Caldy and St Margarets Islands 1922

The island of Caldy and its satellite St Margaret's Isle have for long but quite unknown period been regarded as forming an extra parochial civil and ecclesiastical district, and so entered in the Census Reports (County of Pembroke Table 11) The close proximity of the two islands has naturally caused them to be treated as one entity for administrative purposes, and they are here dealt with under the single title. But this is an error, so far at least as it relates to St Margaret's Island. The documentary evidence produced below shows that historically that islet was at one time part of either the parish of Manorbier or that of Penally.

George Owen, the historian of Pembrokeshire (d 1613) gives the following account of the island of Caldy, which , as Deputy Vice Admiral of Wales, he doubtless knew intimately :-

“Caldey is an Iland as I would judge, a mile long and halfe as broade yt standeth ij miles from the mayne seted opposite to the towne of Tenby, yt is called by Giraldus by the old Brittishe name Ynys Pyrr, that is the Iland of Pyrrus; there was in yt in tymes past a Priorie called (as saieth Lelande) Lille [? L'Isle], a parishe Church and Chappell dedicated to St [left blank] yt did belonge to the Abbey of St Dogmells; and was purchased by Mr Roger Bradshawe that nowe ys, who about foure years past sould the same to Mr Water Philpin of Tenby whose inheritance nowe yt is, the Iland is verie fertile and yeldeth plenty of corne all their plowes goe w'th horses for oxen the inhabitants dare not keepe, fearing the purveyors of the pirates, as they themselves told me , who often make their provisions there by their owne Comission, and most commonlie to the good contentment of the inhabitants when conscionable theefes arrive there, the Iland is of viijt or xen housholdes and some parte of the demesnes annexed to the ruines of the Priorie the Lord keepeth in his hands, yt is nowe growne a question in what hundred of Pembrokeshire this Iland should be whether in Kemes as parcel of St Dogmells, to wych yt appertained, or parte of the next hundred of the maine, and vntill this doubte be decided the inhabitants are content to rest exempt from anie payementes or taxeions wth anie hundred”.

The extra parochial status of Caldy is to be explained by the fact that in the medieval period the entire island was the property of the monks of St Dogmaels and, as such, the house and its insular domain was not subject to the ordinary jurisdiction of the Bishop of the diocese of St David's over his parochial Clergy, though the Bishop possessed the right of visitation, whenever he should consider that circumstances called for the exercise of his authority.

The tiny islet now generally known as St Margaret's lies of the north western point of the island of Caldy. At low tide it is joined to its bigger neighbour.

Following his account of Caldey Island which has been given above, George Owen continues:-

“There is adjoining to this great Caldey a small island placed between yt and the land called little Caldey; yt beareth good grasse for sheep and conyes, and a store of gulls, and is the queens majesties [ide queen Elizabeth's] land parcel of her manour of Manerbire and Penally.

As already stated, the two islands are regarded administratively as one. They are so treated in the Census Reports and notwithstanding the statement of George Owen just quoted expressly asserting the tenurial connection of St Margarets (or Little Caldey , as he terms it) with the Manor of Manorbeer and Penally, they are always dealt with as a single administrative area. The bearing of George Owen's statement has probably been overlooked by reason of the seemingly unimportant nature of the subject. Researches into the public records, made originally for the purpose of resolving the question, have, however, resulted in a discovery of great importance to investigators into the changes which have taken and are taking place in the coastline of the kingdom.

In the course of a survey of the manor of Beer and Penally held at Jameston the 12th August 1618, b y Sir John Stepneth [Stepney} and Thomas Cannon esq.,

the jury having presented “that the seas hath overflowed and overcome a great part of the circuit bounds of the said manor” and also that “one little island called Little Caldye being now at all times compassed with the sea and containing about two acres of pasture” proceeded to make the following statement :--

Memorandum, the said jurors do say by the information of ancient credible persons yet living, and the same is received commonly in the country by tradition, that the said island of Little Caldey which now lieth in the sea about one mile distant from the continent and main land of the said manor, was heretofore a part of the said continent, together with a low marsh ground and woodland extending from the island to a point of headland called Giltor [Giltar], being now the uttermost land bound of the said manor towards the south. And by the reason the said marsh ground and woodland are now overcome by the sea, and drowned, the said land of Little Caldey is thereby made and island and ships do pass betwixt it and the main, whereby a part of the ancient possessions of the said manor is irrecoverably decayed and lost (Pub. Records Office; Land revenue Miscellaneous Books, Vol 206 (Ancient Surveys, 19) fo 75).

This statement, though not absolutely contemporary with the occurrence which it records, is unquestionably authentic, and its accuracy may be considered as established by the certification of two prominent local magnates who must have been well acquainted with the coast. There is little doubt that a stupendous change in the condition of the land surface of western Britain had taken place within a century of the date of the enquiry, that is to say, about the period 1500-1530. The subject is primarily one for the geologist, but it may be said to have a practical interest for archaeologists and historians, since the disappearance of the channel between the mainland at Giltar Point and St Margaret's (ie Little Caldey) Island and the formation of the present coastline, must have produced important changes in the course taken by early navigators along the south coast of Wales.

It is also clear that whatever may have been the case between the mainland of the county and Caldey, the two islands of Caldey and At Margarets had become separated from each other at high tides and that the cleavage had been effected at a period beyond local memory or tradition.

It may also be inferred from the silence of both the survey and historical notes of George Owen, that the smaller islet did not at once obtain the name of St Margaret's Isle, but that in the early years of the 17th century it was best known as Little Caldey.

The Benedictine Priory of Caldey RCAM.

The island of Caldey originally formed part of the territory of Cambrian Chiefton whose principal patrimony consisted of the district of Maenor Pir (Manorbier), the nearest point on the neighbouring mainland to the island. Its Welsh name was Ynys Pir or Pyr.

The inroads of the Norse pirates at the end of the 9th and early part of the 10th centuries were followed by what must have been a very thorough settlement of the coastal districts of the county. These certainly comprised the island of Pyr, which received the new name of Caldey; and the change resulted in the almost total extinction of the Celtic place-names. The new settlers appear to have possessed the same assimilative qualities that characterised their brethren in North western France and following upon their conversion to Christianity, friendship and co-operation seem to have sprung up rapidly between the two peoples. The settlement of the British religious community on Caldy was probably in the nature of separate oratories enclosed within a stone or turf wall, after the manner of the remains which are to be found at the present day on the lonely island of the Skellig (another Norse settlement). Caldey was within easy reach of the mainland, and it is probable that if the original cells of the British devotees had been spared by the first invaders whilst in their pagan stage, they would be taken over and remodelled by the same people after their adoption of Christianity [Giraldus Cambrensis, who was born at Manorbier, and must have known the Monastery well, states that the monks of Caldey were living as solitaries in defiance of papal decrees (Symbolum Electorum Rolls ed 1324)].

The next point in the history of the religious settlement on Caldey is the grant of the island by Geva or Giva, the wife of Martin of Tiron, to the newly founded or re-founded, Monastery of St Dogmaels in the north of the county. Martin came over to England in the wake of the Conqueror, and was granted whatever land he could secure and conveniently retain in South Wales; in virtue of which he became master of the district called Kemes in North west Pembrokeshire. He had apparently intended to enlarge and modernise the small monkish establishment which it is almost certain that he founded at St Dogmaels within his lordship (as it now became) of Kemes, but his intentions were frustrated by death, and his son Robert's grant is the first charter to that house. It would seem from the words of the grant ,Dedit iisdem Monachis mater mea insulam Pyr, qui alio nomine Caldea nuncupatur quam a domino meo rege datam matri meae dederam (Dugdale, Mon. Angl., 130) that Giva may have had some special connection , possibly patrimonial, with Caldey, or that she may have been the daughter of a Scandinavian Viking who had accompanied Martin from the great Scandinavian duchy of Normandy. (There has also been a suggestion that although mother of Robert, she was not Martin's legal wife) It is difficult otherwise to account for Martin or Robert's knowledge of the existence of a small body of monks on a windswept island far distant from Kemes The grant was made in or shortly after the year 1113 and it is clear that within a few years a Monastery, dedicated to St Mary, and closely following the customary plan, was established on Caldey.

The small house passed through a long and uneventful existence, keeping the even tenor of its ways as a cell to St Dogmaels unto the very end in 1535 At The surrender of the house there were eight tenants holding by lease of by the year

Ancient Church RCAM

About 300 yds north east of the priory Church and apparently outside the limits of the Priory enclosure is a building which has many claims to being regarded as the original Church of the island; one that was discarded for new and modernised monastic buildings erected by the monks of St Dogmaels after the grant of Robert de Tiron and Geva his mother. It consists of a simple chancel and nave of almost equal size, the chancel being 18ft square and the nave twenty ft square, and the walls being of uniform thickness of 3 ft. The south and east walls of the chancel are modern. The chancel arch is round, low and only 8ft wide. In 1907 a Norman doorway was discovered in the west wall of the nave. The windows comprise one in the north wall of the chancel, a second in the south wall of the nave The western porch is not bonded into the main wall, and is probably of a later date; above it is a small round window. In 1918 several burials of possibly the 15th century, were discovered beneath the exterior south wall of the Church (trans.Carm. Antiq. Soc. xii 43). The dedication was to St Mary, doubtless in supersession of an earlier Celtic saint.

Ogam and Latin Inscribed stone RCAM

A stone which Fenton , writing in 1811 (tours 458) states was dug up in the ruins of the Priory “many years ago”and which appears to have been used successively as a lintel to a window, and as a garden seat, is now preserved in the Priory Church. The inscription is in Latin and Ogram.

Chapel RCAM

In addition to the priory Church and the ancient (later , parish) Church , a small Chapel stood formally on one of the cliffs. The naturalist Ray, writing in 1662 says “We passed over to Caldey Isle .. In the island are three Chapels, one at the abbey or priory and two more”, Lewis Morris , the antiquary, in his “Plans of Harbours etc” [1748] sketches a small edifice on Chapel point, and describes it as “Chapel seen from sea”. There is now no vestige of a building, but careful excavation might disclose foundations of walls.

The State of Education in Wales1847 Isle of Caldy Report

The entire of this island with the exception of the lighthouse and the road leading to it belongs to Cabot Kynaston esq., who resides there. It comprises about 500 acres. A considerable export trade is carried on from it in limestone. The population are in part agricultural labourers and part quarrymen. There are also a few persons attached to the service of the lighthouse. The labourers earn 1s 2d or 1s 4d per day, with barley sold to them at 3s 6d per bushel, on their own finding.. The quarrymen work by task, and taking the year round earn from 2s to 2s 6d per day. They work, however, especially in summer, when the limestone is lading, a greater number of hours than the common day-labourers. They draw their wages at the rate of 1s per day, and receive the residue at the end of the year in one sum.

The number of children on the island is 39; of these 27 are between 5 and 15 years. There is no school of any kind upon the island, which is 2 ½ miles from Tenby. There is a building used as a Church when any Clergyman chooses to go over and serve it, but there is no regular service or minister. The proprietor does not permit the use of this building to Dissenters. Two or three years ago there was a Clergyman visiting Tenby who used without payment to perform service in the Church regularly, but since his departure the practice has not been maintained. The proprietor considers that the endowment or establishment of a Church might compromise his privileges of being extra parochial and tithe free. The present Bishop of St David's has offered him a bond of indemnity in both respects, but the offer was not accepted. The people on the island are utterly unprovided with instruction either secular or spiritual, save such as they bring with them as immigrants, and can convey in their domestic capacities. It may be that one here and there can put a Child to live with a relative at Tenby, or elsewhere on the mainland where there is a school, but this is not, nor can be, with poor people often the case. There had been a private dame-school kept in the island, but on the dame's death no one succeeded to her post. Tithe and poor-rates are standing monuments, in the common and statute law, of what in this country has been considered due in the way of spiritual and physical from landed property to the creators of its produce. Both of these incidentals, however, are connected with such property by virtue of its being parochial; Caldy is extra parochial, and, accordingly, the labourers upon it have neither Church nor settlement

The proprietor does not permit a public house to be erected on the island. The inhabitants, however, are rather out of the way of temptation than superior to it, whenever liquor can be had , either from vessels that are loaded, or on their visits to the mainland.

I was informed that it was in contemplation by some persons in Tenby to subscribe towards raising a school in the island if a site could be obtained.

Arch Camb 4th series No 8 p 214

There are remains of the staircase which led to the rood-loft in the north wall of the chancel. The Chancel arch is pointed without any moulding. Width of chancel 17' 3". Chancel arch width 13' 5". Nave width 20' 10"

RCAM Pembroke 1920 No 110

The Church was very thoroughly restored in the year 1883. It consists of Chancel, nave and west tower. The chancel arch is sharply pointed. In the north wall are the remains of the rood stairs and facing the nave on either side of the chancel are two plain corbels which supported the loft.

Acc/to The Old Parish Churches of South West Wales by Mike Salter. (1994)

A scalloped Norman font lies in the long nave which has a rood-loft stair on the north side and a 15c south doorway. The chancel has a blocked 13c lancet, a 14c piscina, and a 15c south window. A 14c south Chapel has been demolished and the single arches to the nave and chancel blocked up. The thin west tower is of uncertain date. The nave windows are of 1883

1923 RCAM The Parish Church dedicated to St Ismael

The Church was very thoroughly restored in the year 1883. It consists of a chancel 29 ¼ ft by 17 ¼ ft, nave 65ft by 20 ¾ ft, and a west tower 12ft square. In the north wall of the chancel is a closed Early English lancet, and in the south wall is a similar double light window, also closed. There is a stone bench on either side of the chancel, and in the south east corner a plain piscina. The chancel arch is sharply pointed. In the north wall are the remains of the rood stairs, and facing the nave on either side of the chancel arch are two plain corbels which support the loft. On the exterior south wall of the nave, just beyond the chancel is the outline of a pointed arch which may have led to a now vanished transeptal Chapel, and there are traces of a squint. The north and south doorways to the nave have plain pointed heads, and are without porches. The sanctus Bell-cot and Bell are restorations. The windows Throughout are modern. The font is of the cushion type, the bowl 24in square externally and 18 ½ in internally with a depth of 7 ½ in; it rests upon a plain circular shaft and square base. The total height is 35 in.

The tower is of two stories, with corbel table and battlements. The lower story, which has a plain barrel vault opens to the nave under a pointed arch. It has no external doorway. In the north east corner is a polygonal turret containing fifty nine steps. The lights are mere slits. In the belfry stage is a blocked light which formerly opened upon the Church interior. The walls have no batter, and there is no string course – visited 28th September 1920

St Ismael's; St Ambrose's Church, Camrose RCAHMW

St Ismael's is a Medieval parish Church, probably of 13th century origin with a chancel modified in the 14th century and a tower added in the 15th century. The Church was restored in 1883 by J. P. Seddon, and by Wyn Jones in 2001 after a fire. An octagonal pier at the junction of nave and chancel, found during recent restoration work, provides evidence for two lost south transeptal Chapels.

Camrose (S. Ismael). — The Elizabethan Chalice here corresponds in shape and decoration with the Walton West example, and is of the same date (1574) and by the same maker. This silver-Smith's Mark, M, is also found at Kemble, Glos., 1574; Bridstow, in Herefordshire, 1576, and elsewhere, a cup at Daglingworth, Glos., 1565, supplying O. E. P. with his Mark.

There is a single band of interlaced strap-work on the bowl, with foliation in the usual style. The criss-cross and dot pattern takes the place of the more usual vertical line mouldings on stem and base. The knop on the stem is filleted and is decorated with intermittent lines. Height, 6 in.; weight, 6 oz. 7 dwts. The Paten cover has unfortunately disappeared.

— A Paten, 5in. in diameter resting on a foot ; weight, 3 oz. 15 dwts, with date letter indicating the year 1731. Underneath is inscribed " Presented by Emma Webb Bowen of Camrose September' 1838 " with illegible maker's Mark. This piece is ornamented with the sacred monogram, cross and nails within rays, and was probably purchased from a dealer ; it is of the Britannia standard.

We have no stated minister for the last twelve months being supplied by neighbouring Ministers with the students from the Haverfordwest Academy. the weekly school has been tried by several school Masters since the erection of the Chapel but was given up for the want of scholars the schoolmaster could not find his own support by the number of Scholars attending. We live in an agriculture district, the poorer class being too poor to pay for the schooling of their children. The present school master is an old Englishman, William Rouse, being in this country for this some years he has as yet few scholars he has his maintenance chiefly by the Generosity of friends."

Evidence of local private education is afforded by the Papers of the Great Sessions for 1653, which hand down to us the fact that Mary (afterwards wife of Griffith Tankard of Camrose), on 25 Nov., 1649, before her marriage to her husband, agreed at Roch with John Price, clerk, to board, lodge. and educate at his house at Fishguard one Richard Birt for the sum of £6 per annum. The document goes on to say that Richard Birt was boarded and educated for 2 ½ years, but the £15 due for the same not having been paid, she and her husband, Griffith Tankard, were sued for the amount. Mary Tankard was the daughter of Thomas Hayward of Fletherhill, in the parish of Rudbaxton, and Richard Birt was no doubt the son of her aunt Frances Hayward by her husband Robert Birt of Llwyndyris, while John Price was the vicar of Fishguard.

The State of Education in Wales 1847 Parish of Camrose

Mr Thomas Mathias, farmer, informed me that labourer's wages on their own finding are from 7s to 8s a week, and with food 4s; adult farm servants (many of whom attend Sunday schools) from £7 to £8 a year; female servants , from 50s to £3.

The means of obtaining daily education in this parish are sufficient; there are three day schools in the parish, two of them tolerably well conducted; viz WolfsDale and Cleddau schools — January 5th 1847 Wm Morris Assistant

Cleddeau School

This school is held in a barn adjoining Cleddau Lodge and converted into a schoolroom. It is in good repair, as well as the furniture which consists of two desks, one large table, seven benches, and a large box to keep the books..

The mistress gives great satisfaction to Miss Akland , who supports the school, principally at her own expense; the scholars who are labourers , farmers and mechanics shildren, pay 1d per week; this is returned in clothing and books. The girls are taught sewing and needlework, and the school is held in high estimation in the neighbourhood.-- January 5th 1847 Wm Morris Assistant

WolfsDale School

This school is conducted in a schoolhouse erected in 1840 on ground belonging to the Independents by public subscription. The schoolroom is on the ground floor, on the first there are two rooms for the master's residence. The furniture consists of one square table, two benches with ten planks lying on one side of the room to be made into desks as soon as funds could be had for that purpose.

The chief supporter of this school is C. W. Bowen esq.. Of Camrose who pays £10 a year for teaching the children of his tenants and others that are too poor to pay. The school is open to all and no catechisms of any description taught. The scholars who are not of Mr Bowen's nomination list pay from 1d to 3d a week.

The master who is the Minister of the Independent Chapel adjoining, spoke English well.

January 5th 1847 Wm Morris Assistant

Keystone School

The furniture of the schoolroom consisted of three tables, six benches one chair, a bed for the master, two boxes, and various articles for domestic purposes.

The master is an elderly person living alone, in distressed circumstances. He is a Welshman by birth, and not thoroughly conversant with English.

Canon Sir, Thomas 1620s was a member of an ancient family in Pembrokeshire, and flourished in the reign of James I. He was a man of great wealth, power, and learning. As an antiquary, he justly ranked very high, and distinguished himself in the celebrated controversy, in which he maintained that Carlell, to whom Rhodri Mawr, in the distribution of his principality, gave the chief portion of South Wales, with the palace at Dinevawr, was his eldest son. This gave rise to a warm contest, and brought into the field, on the other side, the more eminent antiquary, Vaughan, Robert of Hengwrt, who refuted all the arguments of his opponents in his "British Antiquities revived." Eminent Welshmen –R Williams 1852

Sites of Interest - RCAM 1923 & RCAHMW

Camrose House

An 18th century mansion, of random rubble build; the north (entrance) front is of five bays on three stories with basement & attics, having a central door, approached by steps.
Seat formerly of Bowen family. RCAHMW,

Camrose House, Garden, Camrose

Compact estate on southern outskirts of Camrose. Well preserved motte with a possible viewing platform adjoining. walled garden with a mill nearby.

It appears that the motte has been used as a viewing platform - 19th cent steps, walls, gateways and crown of yew trees. The walled garden with well preserved high walls is L-shaped to leave the motte in the angle.

Gardens, depicted by OS County series associated with Camrose House the mound is recorded elsewhere as a medieval Castle motte [though it is most probably a garden viewing platform Its main elements on that map include river, conservatory, woodland, walled garden, well, possible viewing platform, terrace and greenhouse

RCAHMW J.Wiles 18.03.05

Camros Castle; Camrose, Castle Mound

A motte and Bailey Castle. The currently ditchless motte, 34m in diameter and 4.8m high, has been adapted as a garden feature (see Nprn265265), with a spiral walk, yew plantings and a wall about the 16m summit; the Bailey, now isolated by a modern road, north of the motte, has a remaining area of 24m by 28m, and is defined by a bank with a ditch to the west and steep slopes to the north-east and east.

It is suggested that, rather than representing a medieval Castle, the 'motte' was originally a viewing platform for the gardens of Camrose House.

Camrose Mill

Camrose Mill is an early- to mid-nineteenth century two-storey building, now converted to a dwelling. It is constructed from rubblestone with a pitched slate roof and with a single brick chimney stack at the south end. There is a lean-to at the south gable, and a restored waterwheel at the north gable. The historic O.S. 25-inch maps show a leat from the Camrose Brook and a Long millpond behind the mill (the west side), and a tailrace which parallels the stream and passes under the adjacent road bridge.

Plumstone Mountain Tumuli

On the summit of Plumstone Mountain are three sepulchral mounds :-

The largest and best preserved of the group is about half a mile to the north east of the carnedd on Dudwell Mountain. It stands 500 feet above sea level, and commands a wide view. It is a shapely grass covered mound 15ft in height, and a base circumference of 200 ft. It shows signs of a slight disturbance.

About 500 yds to the east are :-

Two smaller mounds, close to the prominent Plumstone Rosk. Each mound has a height of 5ft and a base circumference of some 150ft. They are grass grown and have been disturbed to a slight extent – Visited 25th April 1921.

Dudwell Mountain Carnedd

On the summit of Dudwell Mountain at Bench Mark 583 the 6in Ordinance sheet marks “ Beacon on site of carnedd”. All that is visible on this exposed and unenclosed summit are some few stones, of which only three are in their original positions, the remains of a demolished cromlech. The capstone has disappeared. The chamber whose axis is north and south, may have had a length of 5ft and a width of 2 ft. There are slight traces of the base of the cairn, which had a circumference of about 200ft. The view in all directions is extensive. Visited 25th April 1921.

Robleston Mountain Standing Stone

The left hand post of the gate on the road running from the Causeway to Twmpath farm has every appearance of having been one of the supporters of a cromlech which was standing on or near this spot about the year 1840. It has a height from the level of 8ft, is somewhat square in shape and has a flattened summit. The fields immediately to the east of it are still known as west and east Black Tump and White Tump which denotes a sepulchral mound –Visited 25th April 1921.

Plumstone Circle

On the original 1” Survey Map a circle is marked as standing on Plumstone Mountain, but little or no sign of such is now visible, and the site appears to be the same as that shown on the modern maps as “Tumuli”. All that can be said is that some three or four stone remain which may have formed part of a circle that had a possible diameter of 40 ft. The others have been either removed or sunk into the open moor. The distance between three of the stone is 5ft, the space to the fourth is 10 ft; but the ruin is too complete to admit of further details – visited 25th April 1921.

Crowhill Earthwork

This work stands on a bluff or low promontory north of Crowhill Bridge, overlooking the junction of Pelcombe Brook with the western Cleddeau. The defences consist of a single rampart and ditch to the north west, with the natural fall to the streams on each side of the triangular enclosure. The bank somewhat more curved than usual has been considerably disturbed. It rises from the level of the interior to an average height of 5ft Throughout its course of 300ft and drops from 2 to 3ft to a shallow exterior ditch. The entrance to the enclosure was at the east end of the bank; it has been much altered. The site is overgrown and difficult of examination. The field to the north-west where the ground rises slightly is known as Rath Park, the enclosed area as Rath.-- visited 28th September 1920

Pelcombe Rath

A triangular enclosure with widely curved Angles overlooking Pelcombe Brook, and distant about 500yds north east of Pelcombe Bridge. The work is placed on the side of a slight Hill. The bank to the north and east rises 2ft and drops 4ft to an outer ditch which has been filled in by cultivation to a present depth of 2ft. On the other sides of the work the bank is lower, barely rising a foot above the interior, and falling some 4ft to the level outside; here the ditch has disappeared. The entrance was to the west. The banks have been lowered through agricultural operations. The enclosure contains about half an acre – visited 28th September 1920.

Plumstone Camp

Immediately north of the farmhouse of Rath is a much disturbed oval enclosure known locally as Plumstone Rath, having on its southern side faint indications of a square enclosure, and still fainter traces of another enclosure on the north. The oval enclosure measures 270ft by 200ft, its rampart has an average rise of 4ft to 5ft from the fairly level interior, and an exterior fall of 7ft. If an ditch existed it has been filled up. The entrance to this enclosure is difficult to locate with certainty; it seems to have been on the south, when it would have been protected by a square enclosure; but the latter is so indistinct as to preclude a precise description. It may have been about 30ft square with a bank somewhat higher than the inner enclosure. There is no signs of a ditch, but it may have had an Independent entrance to the west. Of the possible enclosure on the north side nothing definite can be said. The entire work has suffered much from cattle and cultivation. The field next west is known as Rath Park – visited 26th April 1921.

Cutty Bridge Rath

On a field known as Rath Park immediately west of Cutty Bridge and overlooking the western Cleddau, is an earthwork which is not marked on the 6in Ordinance sheet. Although much broken down, there is yet visible a semicircular bank about 180 ft in length. Where it is best preserved it has a height of 2ft. There are no traces of a ditch. - visited 28th September 1920

RoseMary Rath

This is an earthwork situated on an arable field of Slade farm, and on the south bank of the Camros Brook, which it overhangs some 150ft. On the north side of the enclosure the steep fall to the brook is the sole defence. A bank some 120yds in length runs from south to west, the western end of which (where was the entrance) is practically destroyed . The south end of the bank has a maximum rise of 6ft and a fall of 8ft to the outer level; it terminates in a mound or tump about 12ft high, which is now partially destroyed. If there was a ditch it has disappeared. The ground outside rises sharply to the south east. – visited 28th September 1920.

Camros Castle

A shapely mound about 25ft in height standing directly to the south of the village of Camros. It has been cultivated and in parts strengthened by walling to provide a pathway to the summit, where several yew trees have been planted. It was apparently oval in shape, and had a wet ditch. The parish Church is immediately to the north of the mound. - visited 13th May 1920. RCAM

Camros Castle; Camrose, Castle Mound

A motte and Bailey Castle. The currently ditchless motte, 34m in diameter and 4.8m high, has been adapted as a garden feature with a spiral walk, yew plantings and a wall about the 16m summit; the Bailey, now isolated by a modern road, north of the motte, has a remaining area of 24m by 28m, and is defined by a bank with a ditch to the west and steep slopes to the north-east and east.

It is suggested that, rather than representing a medieval Castle, the 'motte' was originally a viewing platform for the gardens of Camrose House. RCAHMW

The Causeway

The number of pre Norman antiquities in this parish gives special importance to the lines of communication that traverse it, and particularly to that distinguished by the name of "the Causeway". This takes an almost perfectly straight north-westerly course through the parish from St Catherine's Bridge, where it crosses the western Cleddau, with a southerly continuation past Cutty Bridge and Crow Hill Rath to Haverfordwest. At the northern termination of the road in the parish of Camrose the parish boundary makes a sharp Angle at the foot of the Hill called Cuffern Mountain, and just below is a standing stone, the solitary survivor of what was probably a fine cromlech less than a century ago. At the Angle just referred to the road reaches its northern limit, taking from that point a south westerly trend and making directly for Roch Castle. Thence it pursues a more desultory course until it terminates at the small but safe Nolton Haven. It would appear that it is only the portion of the track lying within the parish of Camros that became known as The Causeway, and possibly only the southern section between the five -lane-ends called the Folly and Cuffern Mountain. At the present time the name is known only to the older inhabitants. There was probably a Chapel of St Catherine at the crossing over the western Cleddau.

Castle Hill

A short mile due north of Cutty Bridge a Camp is marked on the original 1" Ordinance Survey, on fields known as Castle Hill and Lower Castle Hill. The indication on the map and the names of the fields are practically all the evidence available that an earthwork ever stood here. Agricultural operations have removed whatever there may have been, though a very slight rise may denote the actual site. Visited 28th September 1920.

Old Chapel

The name by which a field about 150 yds south east of Leweston Old Mill is locally known. There is nothing visible above ground to suggest that any building stood here; but the site is much overgrown and examination is difficult. The adjoining field to the south east is called Rath Hill – RCAM

Capel Colman, (Llangolman)

A Topographical Dictionary of Wales - S. Lewis 1849.

Capel Colman, otherwise, Llangolman, a parish, in the union of Newcastle-Emlyn, hundred of Kilgerran, county of Pembroke, South Wales, 6 miles (SW. by W.) from Newcastle- Emlyn; containing 142 inhabitants. This parish is situated on the road from Newcastle-Emlyn to Narberth; and is bounded on the north by Llanvihangel-Penbedw, on the south by Penrith and Clydey, on the east by Cardiganshire, and on the west by Eglwysrw and Llanvair Nantgwyn. It comprises about 750 acres, of which sixty are woodland, and the remainder nearly equally divided between arable and pasture: the surface is undulated, and the scenery, embracing wood and water, picturesque and beautiful; the soil is dry, and the chief produce, corn, butter, and cheese. A rivulet, called the Dylas, runs through the parish.

Kilwendeg, the seat of Miss Jones, (see Orielton/Monkton) an elegant mansion, erected within the last seventy years, is ornamented with a receding portico in good taste, and occupies the centre of an extensive demesne, beautifully laid out in plantations and pleasure-grounds, to which are entrances by two handsome lodges, more recently built; the lawn in front of the house embraces a view of some of the finest scenery in the county, including the luxuriant woods around Fynnonau. Miss Jones, and her brother, the Rev. John Jones, are the principal landed proprietors, and Pryse Pryse, esq. is Lord of the manor.

The living is a perpetual curacy, endowed with £800 royal bounty; net income, £72: the patronage and impropriation belong to Miss Jones. The Church, dedicated to St. Colman, from whom the parish takes its name, is a small neat edifice, erected in 1835, partly by subscription, and partly by a rate on the inhabitants; it is forty feet in length and twenty-two in breadth, and has a large gallery.

St. Colman Parish of Capel Colman)

RCAM 1925 - Church built 18c restored 1895.

The Church was built about the end of the 18th century and restored in 1895. it contains no features of interest or antiquity, unless perhaps the plain circular font be excepted ; but as this object is thickly covered with paint, the means of of fixing its period have been obscured. -Visited 18th August 1915. An earlier Church would appear to have been practically abandoned prior to the year 1721 according to A view of the State of Religion in the Diocese of St David in the beginning of the 18th Century written by Rev Dr Erasmus Saunders [Prebndary of St David's Cathedral.

This living is now a perpetual curacy held in plurality with Llanfihangel Penbedw. It was formerly a Chapelry, and so far as can be judged, was from 1394 to 1497 held with the Chapel of Cilvowir, in the parish of Llanfihangel Penbedw.; at all events the only references during that period to Capel Colman, or Llangolman, as it was then called, show that the custos or incumbent of the one Chapel also held the other.

The Valor Eccl. makes no mention of this benefice, although it gives particulars of the Chapel of Kileveweir. In 1594 Capel Colman was in the hands of the Queen, but about that period it seems to have been, at all events temporarily abandoned - Owen's Pem., Pt. 2, p. 297.

That the Chapel was abandoned prior to 1721, so far as religious services were concerned, is plainly shown by the following extract: "here are some churches that are totally neglected, and that very rarely, if at all, have any service performed in them and which, if they are not converted into barns and stables, which is the case of many churches in England as well as Wales, do only serve for the solitary habitations of owles and jackdaws; such are St. Daniels, Castelharn, Kilvawyr, Mounton, Capel Colman, and others in Pembrokeshire." View of State of Religion in the Diocese of St Davids by E[rasmus] Saunders, D.D., published in 1721.

The tithes and ancient endowments of Capel Colman were presumably all seized by the Crown, but the Church has gradually been re-endowed during the last two hundred years.

On 18th January 1895, a faculty was obtained for the restoration of this Church.

Capel Colman has no residential Clergy, no landed proprietor nor farmer paying above £100 in rent.

It is an agricultural area with labourers receiving 6s per week on their own finding. The moral character is regarded as good and for the most part the people can read and write but the Rev William James, Perpetual Curate for Capel Colman who lived in Cardigan did not know how many children were in need of education.

Sites of Interest

Maen Colman

In the year 1861 this stone was described as being “in a hedgerow about 100 yds south from the tower of the new Church of Capel Colman”(Arch Camb III, vii 209) It must have been removed thence a few years later , for it is said by Westwood (Lapid walliae 120) to be used as a gate post between 100 and 200yds from the parish Church. It has since been placed in the parish Church.

It has a present height of 57 in and a width of 24 in. The cross may date from the 9th or 10th century; its form should be compared with that upon one of the stones at Clydai, and the fragment at St Dogmaels. The plain cross incised on the back of the stone, which hitherto seems to have been dismissed without seems to have dismissed without comment, is also found upon the Clydai stone --Visited 18th August 1915.

Finds – Bronze Celt.

A flanged and looped bronze cely 5in in length entirely covered with a deep Green patina was found in the year 1916 during the ploughing of a field called Parc Maen on the farm of Llwynbedw, probably (from the field name) the original site of Maen Colman. Now in the Museum of the Carmarthenshire Antiquarian Society RCAM 1923.

Carew

1834 A Topographical Dictionary of Wales S Lewis.

Carew a parish in the hundred of Narberth, county of Pembroke, 5 miles E by N. from Pembroke, on the road from Narberth, containing 1020 inhabitants. This parish probably derives its name, which was perhaps originally Caerau, from several ancient British fortifications, upon the site of some of which a magnificent Castle in the Norman style was erected by Gerald de Windsor, lieutenant to Ralph de Montgomery, and who on the subsequent disgrace of that baron, was appointed by Henry I. Castellan of Pembroke. Gerald married Nest, daughter of Rhys ab Tewdwr, Prince of South Wales, with whom, among other manors, he obtained that of Carew on which he built a strong and superb Castle, coequally adapted to the purposes of a military fortress and a splendid baronial residence.

Before Gerald was well fixed in his new palace, it was attacked by Owain, the son of Cadwgan ab Bleddyn, who, being informed of the surpassing beauty of Nest, at a banquet given by Caedwgan, at the Castle of Aberteivy, or, as some think, at that of Eare Weare, in the parish of Amroath, became enamoured of her, and assaulting the Castle at night, with a party of his adherents, carried her off by force.

This celebrated structure, of which the ruins plainly indicate its pristine grandeur, descended to William, the son of Gerald, who first assumed the name of Carew probably corrupted from Caerau, and continued for several generations in his family till the reign of Henry VII when Sir Edward Carew mortgaged the estate to Sir Rhys ab Thomas, who, it is generally believed added the noble suite of state apartments on the north east and made it his residence during the latter period of his life. Sir Rhys being a knight of the most noble order of the garter, and unable from age and infirmity to attend his sovereign in London, on the celebration of St. Georges day kept that festival with princely magnificence at his Castle of Carew upon which occasion he entertained with sumptuous hospitality six hundred of the principal nobility and gentry of the surrounding country, whom he feasted for a whole week, and diverted with jousts, tournaments, and other exercises of chivalry.

On the attainder of Gruffydd ab Rhys, son of the above nobleman, in the reign of Henry VIII., the estate was leased for a term of years to Sir Andrew Perrot and others, from whom the remainder of the term was subsequently purchased by Sir John Carew lineal descendant of Sir Edward Carew to whom the whole was granted in fee by Charles I.

Thomas Carew esq., great grandson of Sir John, dying in 1760, without male issue, the estate was divided between his two daughters and coheiresses, and is now the property of John Warrington Carew esq., of Crocombe Court, in the county of Somerset.

The Castle was erected on a peninsular promontory of inconsiderable elevation, in the southern branch of Upton creek in Milford Haven, and occupies a quadrangular area of considerable extent, defended at the Angles with massive circular towers: the more ancient part, built in the reign of William Rufus is in the Norman style of architecture, and the splendid range of state apartments, on the north-east, is in the most elaborate and finished style of the later English. The ruins are extensive, and may be regarded as among the most interesting and beautiful in the principality: the walls of several of the noble apartments and of the Chapel are still remaining and are replete with elegant detail; the former consisted of a noble range, two stories in height, lighted by lofty square-headed windows of elegant design, and enriched with beautiful tracery and the exterior of the front was decorated with two lofty and spacious oriel windows From the towers, to the summits of which an ascent is afforded by staircases in a dilapidated condition, an extensive and pleasing prospect is obtained of the Haven, on one side, and of the surrounding country on the other, which abounds with interesting scenery, enlivened by humorous seats in the vicinity. Within the parish are several gentlemen s seats, of which the principal are, Milton House, formerly part of the extensive estate belonging to Upton Castle., and now the property and residence of William Bowen, esq., an elegant modern mansion, pleasantly situated within grounds tastefully laid out, and comprehending some interesting and diversified scenery; Freestone Hall the residence of J. Allen, esq., commanding from the grounds some of the finest views in the county, embracing Lawrenny and its fine estuary, Clareston, and the hundred of Rhos, to the west; and south Wilsdon a substantial modern houses the seat of George Donne, esq. This last was erected on the site of an ancient family mansion, in which Oliver Cromwell took up his quarters, while besieging the Castle of Pembroke: during his abode here, he was confined to his bed by an attack of the gout, and, in writing a dispatch to the parliament, is said to have spilled some ink upon the a coverlid, which is still preserved in the family. The parish contains a vast quantity of excellent limestone, which is conveyed in small craft of twelve or fifteen tons burden to the upper parts of this county and of Cardiganshire.

of inferior quality is procured on the north side of the parish but only for the supply of the immediate neighbourhood.

The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of St Davids, not rated in the King's Books, endowed with £200 private benefaction £400 royal bounty, and £800 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of the Bishop of St Davids. The Church, dedicated to St. John the Baptist, is a spacious and venerable structure, in the early style of English architecture with a lofty square embattled tower, comprising a nave and aisles, a chancel, and a north transept; the floor is paved with bricks, several of which bear curious inscriptions. In the north transept, which was the sepulchral Chapel of the owners of the Castle, is an altar-tomb, on which are the recumbent effigies of Sir John Carew and his lady, with the date 1637 and in the south aisle are the effigies of a crusader and a priest, but without either date or inscription. In the churchyard is an ancient building, apparently coeval with the Church, which is occasionally used as a parochial school, the master being appointed by the vicar. There are places of worship for Baptists and Wesleyan Methodists. Near the turnpike gate is a perfect cross, of that kind usually called St. Catherine's of which the circular head is fixed into a tall shaft, ornamented with scrolls and tracery, rising from a substantial pedestal; in one of the compartments into which the shaft is divided there is an illegible inscription.

The average annual expenditure for the maintenance of the poor amounts to £406. 13.

Carew Cross

A well-known cross which stands erect by the roadside, a few yards from the entrance to the medieval Castle. It was moved to its present position about 1922 as a result of road widening work, from a site which it had been moved to a hundred years previously, and the original site is not known. In 1844 the cross was blown down and was reset in its socket by Rev. Lloyd using lead from the old font.

The 11th century Carew Cross is one of three fine early Christian monuments found in Wales - the others being at Nevern and Maen Achwyfan. The cross stands majestically guarding the entrance to Carew Castle. It may be described as a wheel headed cross on a tall shaft which is beautifully inscribed with intricate patterns. Its mixture of Celtic and Scandinavian influences hearken back to pre-Norman Wales, when the country was ruled by powerful, Independent princes. The cross is inlaid with fine Celtic knot-work and interlaced ribbon pattern, its two sides displaying different variations. After years of controversy, the crude inscription on the cross was finally translated in the 1940s. the cross is a royal memorial. The inscription “Margit eut rex etg(uin) Filius” commemorating Maredud ap Edwin, who became joint ruler with his brother of Duheubarth, the kingdom of Southwest Wales, in 1033, only to be killed in battle two years later. He was the great-grandson of Hywel Dda and was killed in battle when Cynan ap Seisyllt invaded Dyfed and Dheubarth. This cross was erected as a royal memorial soon after that date.

Carew Castle.

Carew Castle is justly celebrated as one of the most magnificent castles of south Wales. Its position is low-lying, but still prominent in the flat land around the tidal reaches of the Carew river. The Castle stands at the end of a ridge at a strategically excellent site commanding a crossing point of the then still navigable river.

The modern entrance to the Castle is from the east, following the medieval route through the Bailey, within which lie low grassy footings of the later medieval service buildings. These were protected by a gate house, a wall and a massive rock-cut ditch. Excavations have shown that this ditch was in fact a recut of a much earlier one, dug as part of a defensive system cutting off the ridge in pre- Norman, perhaps Iron Age times.

Little now remains of the earth and timber Castle that was built here by the Norman Gerald of Windsor around 1100. It is first mentioned in 1212, when for some reason, King John seized it for a short time when passing through Pembroke on his Irish expedition. By this time it is probable that the first stone structure, the Old Tower, had been built to protect the original Castle entrance.

In 1212 described as “the house of Carrio” [Rot Lit Pat 92b]

William the son of Nesta, adopted the name Carew. He died at the age of 70 and was succeeded by his son Raymond de Carew who had been taking part in the invasion of Ireland. His descendant Sir Nicholas de Carew held high office in Ireland between 1284 and 1310 and accompanied Edward I into Scotland. He ravaged Galloway, and was present at the siege of Caerlaverock (Dumfries). The speaks of him as “a valiant man of great fame”. His son John also did good service against the Irish and the Scots, and when he died in 1324, Edward III granted his widow Joan, "six tuns of wine a year during the King's pleasure". The son and namesake of Sir John fought in the French Wars, and in recognition of the prowess of his Welsh archers at Crecy, the black lion of the Carew crest carried a golden arrow. His great-grandson another Sir Nicholas, who died in 1447 was succeeded at Carew by his son, Sir Thomas , whilst his fifth son William, married the heiress of Sir Hugh Courtney of Haccombe beginning the long connection of the Carews with the west country holding lands in Devon and at Camerton and Crowcombe in Somerset and were the ancestors of the present owners of Carew Castle. The last of the older line to hold Carew was Sir Edmund, who mortgaged the estates to Sir Rhys ap Thomas in 1480. Five years later both fought for Henry VII at Bosworth and both were Knighted on the field of battle. Sir Edmund was slain by a “gonne” at the siege of Touraine on June 28 1513 and was buried at Calais.

Sir Rhys ap Thomas entertained Henry at Carew after he landed at Dale but it was twenty seven years later that he held the most spectacular event at Carew - a tournament to celebrate his admission into the Order of the Garter.

After the death of Sir Rhys various people held Carew with little good luck.

In 1601 Sir George Carew son of Dr. George Carew Dean of Windsor, and afterwards Earl of Totnes wrote to Lord Burleigh that his "grandfather, Sir Edmund mortgaged Carew Castle to Sir Rees ap Thomas , whose grandson Sir Griffith Ap Rees, Sir John Perrot, and the Earl of Essex possessed it since. They all died attainted and two were executed, so I think that land will prove unlucky to all men that shall enjoy it, except it be a Carew".

In 1607 Sir John Carew of Crowcombe took up residence at Carew and eventually bought back the estate. His descendants have remained in possession ever since although they ceased to live at Carew in 1687. The present descendants and owners are the Trollope-Bellews of Crowcombe Court.

Prof. A. Hamilton Thompson observes (Military I. Architecture in England During the Middle Ages, p. 330):—

At Carew in Pembrokeshire, three stages in the development of the domestic ideal as applied to military architecture can be studied in close proximity. On the east side of the ward are the earlier domestic apartments, somewhat cramped and gloomy, with outer windows which, wherever they occur, as in the Chapel and adjacent rooms, admit daylight very faintly. On the west side is the great Hall built in the fifteenth century by Rhys ap Thomas , with its imposing porch-tower and entrance stair, a large and amply lighted room. On the north are the additions made in the sixteenth century by Sir John Perrott. The eastern rooms are those of a house within a Castle: the western Hall is that of a house which, although military considerations have had no part in its planning is still confined within an earlier curtain. On the north side, however, the curtain has been broken through and a series of apartments has been built out beyond its limits, proclaiming with their long mullioned windows piercing the walls from floor to roof that the day of castles is over.

Carewe Castell - description 1531.

This Castle standeth by the watersides nine miles from Milford Haven, and is built with hard stone. (Pubs Record Office: Exchequer, Treasurer of the Reciepts; Miscellaneous Books, Vol. 151, fo. 7.)

There can be little doubt that the additions of Sir John Perrott were made at the cost of considerable damage to the more artistic improvements of Sir Rhys ap Thomas. His fall and tragic end, however, came before the work then in hand was completed. All the new buildings had been roofed, and some of the rooms had their windows glazed, but others were still unglazed. He also increased the demesne which was about 136 acres by about 320 acres, 191 being added to the Castle demesne, while a further 129 acres went into the creation of his new dairy farm at New Shipping, just across the tidal creek from the Castle. Most of the land 118 acres in all, was purchased from Lady Jones, 27 acres were bought from Richard and David Meredith, 14 acres from Henry Adams, and 9 acres from Hugh Owen, gent. The rest of the newly-acquired demesne lands seem to have been acquired from various customary tenements.

After Sir John Perrott's death in 1592, the Castle and its demesne was granted upon lease to one Edward Webb, who conveyed it to Sir John Carew both of whom successively appear to have resided there. The latter in turn conveyed his interest to Sir John Philipps of Picton and Clog y fran near St. Clears, Carmarthenshire, to whom succeeded his son Sir Richard Philipps.

Complaints had frequently been made to the Crown authorities of the destruction wrought upon the Castle by the successive lessees, and several Crown enquiries were held into the charges, as well as several suits brought in the Court of Exchequer by each outgoing lessor against his predecessor for waste for which he found himself liable. As an answer to the last of these brought by Sir John Carew (with whom was joined Sir John Williams, attorney general, as representing the Crown) against Sir Richard Philipps of Picton, the defence produced the jurors' schedule to a Crown surveyor taken in the eighth year of James I (1611), which specified the "decays" then existing in the Castle and attendant Properties, with the estimated cost of restoring them at that date. The list is of considerable interest as showing how grievously the splendid edifice had suffered in the course of a few years. The schedule is as follows:-

A particular note of the decays of Carewe Castle, the French Mills and New Shipping dayrie, token by vertue of a commission from His Majesty's Court of Exchequer upon the 3rd day of April, anno., James of England, etc., 8th [1610].

The evidence given at Carew on the 24th April, 9 Ch.I, in reply to interrogatories in the suit of Sir John Carew and others against Sir Richard Phillipps, gives a sad picture of the depredations to which the Castle had been subjected since the attainder and execution of Sir John Perrott.

John Will, of the parish of Carew yeoman, aged 40, deposed that he knew the Castle, the farmhouses of New Shippon Deyrye [dairy], where those of Somerton do lie though he was never there, and the mills adjoining the Castle commonly called the French mills, and did know a bridge made with lime and stone which he conceiveth to be the bank or wall mentioned in the interrogatory, and the two parks known as Mill park or Carew park, and Williamston park.

William Barlow, of Creswell, esq., aged 61, spoke of the occupation of the Castle and premises by Sir John Carew some fifteen years previously and the succession of Sir John Phillipps, bart., deceased. At the time of Sir John Carew's death the Castle was in decay, and some of the lead, timber, windows and glass were also in decay, and some of the lead pipes through which the water was formerly brought to the said Castle had been taken away. The new buildings which, as he believed were never finished, are now a great deal more in decay than when Sir John Carew one of the complainants left: the timber and roof, glass windows and iron bars of the windows of the two towers near adjoining to the great Hall [the north-west and south-west towers] are more decayed. Prior to Sir John Carew one Edward Webb occupied the Castle premises, in whose time decays, wastes and spoils were committed.

Thomas Howell, of Llanboydye, co. Carmarthen, aged 30, deposed that the defendant's steward had delivered to him being a joiner, ten oaken planks brought forth out of the Castle, which were converted to the use of the said Sir John Phillipps, deceased, and turned into rails for wainscot for 8 windows at the then dwelling house of the said Sir John Phillipps at Clog y Fran in the county of Carmarthen.

John James, of Carew shepherd, aged 54, said that a year before Sir John Carew gave up occupation (about 14 years since) all the roofs of the old Hall and the roofs of all the new buildings were covered with lead, but whether all the leads were sound and whole to defend wind and weather he knew not. At which time also some of the windows were glazed, and some were in decay. In Sir John Carew's time water was conveyed from the head of the well through pipes of lead into the kitchen. The brew house is fallen and utterly decayed in the time of Sir John Phillipps which in the time of the previous occupier was supported by "strods and propts".

John Bartlett, of Carew Smith, aged 50, deposed that in the time of Sir John Phillipps he saw in the Castle two carriages for ordnance which wanted wheels, but what is become of the same he knoweth not.

(Public Record Office- Exchequer Depositions, Pembroke, 9 Charles I., Easter, No. 3.)

The Castle stands upon a small piece of rocky ground that rises a few feet above a reach or pill of Milford Haven which flows within 100 feet of the northwestern curtain. There can be no doubt that the conformation of the site governed the departures from strict regularity of plan that are to be found in the structure. The general plan was the simple one of a rectangle, deviating slightly from a perfect square, with towers at each corner. The space enclosed within the quadrangles called in the survey the quadrant court, measures midway about 90 feet from east to west and about 100 feet from north to south. The original buildings were doubtless ranged along the inner side of the curtains; these have disappeared entirely from the north and south sides of the court, having been cleared away from the former by Sir John Perrott to make room for his contemplated Hall and galleries. On the west side much of the basement storey, above which rises Sir Rhys ap Thomas 's reconstruction, consists of the original building, though the chambers were probably altered considerably to adapt them to the new superstructure. The east side, where is the gateway, was least changed by both Sir Rhys ap Thomas and Sir John Perrott. The gateway was placed close to the south-east tower. As to this part of the Castle, Prof. Hamilton Thompson's account is as follows: "The [south-east] tower at Carew is at earliest of late 13th-century date, and has several advanced features. Though its projection from the curtain is regularly rounded, its inward projection is rectangular, so that its plan is actually an oblong with a rounded end. It seems to have been intended to have been used in connection with the gate house; its first and second floors had no direct connection with each other, but both communicated with the gate house, and the ground-floor of the gate-house had a large lateral opening in the direction of the first floor of the tower.

The corresponding tower at the north-east angle was used in connection with the domestic buildings and had a vaulted Chapel upon its first floor, from the north-west wall of which open two rooms for the use of the priest, with a garde-robe in the second. One tower therefore, was purely defensive, additional precautions having been taken no doubt to guard a postern which opens from the basement upon the scarp of the ditch; while the other was merely an annexe to one of the two dwelling houses within the enclosure."

Mr Cobb describes the Chapel at length and argues for an earlier date.

"To the east of the Hall is the Chapel 36 1/2 ft by 17 ft. that is exactly one third smaller than the Chapel at Manorbere. It is vaulted, as is the crypt beneath, and had ribs of plain hammer-dressed stones, 10 inches wide, forming two bays and a half. The east end is a demi-octagon, having three lights; one at the east, and one on each of the north and south sides on the right of the entrance is the sandstone recess for the stoop. Between the east and south windows is the piscine, also of sandstone, evidently once highly finished, and most distinctly Early English; and on the corresponding face a plain aumbry. Between the north window and the door to the priest's rooms is a good-sized built plain fireplace, clearly original; and at the west end, between the two doors, is an arched opening to the lower eastern Hall 4 feet wide and 4 feet high, similar to that which existed at Manorbere before the latter was converted into a door. The windows, apparently, were built up at the bottom, and widened, probably to admit Sir Rhys's freestone but every vestige of it has now disappeared. Fortunately, however he built over the sill and one jamb of the original sandstone Early English window. This I have uncovered, and from it can be clearly made out the character of what it had been. The priest's rooms consist of one chamber with a fireplace, and beyond it a smaller, with latrine, all vaulted."

There can be no doubt that both the north and south angle towers, as also the east and west towers with their intermediate curtain, are portions of the original work of about 1270. The entire range of apartments backing upon the Curtain and looking out upon the quadrangle, including the connected rooms of the same level in the end towers, were reconstructed by Sir Rhys ap Thomas . So thorough there the alterations effected by Sir Rhys that it is difficult to ascertain what original features of the basement store he retained. He at any rate converted the entire space on the ground level between the towers into one chamber divided down the centre by a row of nine piers, both compartments being vaulted. [Mr. Hamilton Thompson thinks this basement chamber may have been used as stables, while Mr. Cobb, with greater probability, suggests it may have been "for the use of followers". At the time of the Survey it was used as a buttery.]

The floor above Sir Rhys devoted to what must have been a magnificent apartment. "It is," says Mr. Cobb, "about 90 feet long, and nearly 30 feet broadly [actually 81 feet by 30 feet.] and had a timber high-pitched roof, the ridge of which was about 40 feet from the floor. At the south end is an arched recess with an elaborate window at the back not included in the alcove dimensions. This was probably the musicians' gallery; and on the east side of the north end was a bow window projecting into the court. Three lights to the west, which were Early English, were widened and filled up, both alcove and below with perpendicular freestone. The most northerly still shows the Early English jambs and seats."

Entrance to this splendid apartment was obtained by a flight of twenty-three broad steps from the courtyard which gave upon a fine porch leading to what the Survey calls "a porthole chamber at the Hall door." The Survey adds that the chamber was warmed by two fireplaces, and that the "upper Hall or dais, was tiled with Flanders tiles.

The towers at either end of the Hall had each of them a cellar entered by a flight of steps from the buttery; above cellars were only two storeys, each floor having but one room, the lower floor communicating with the buttery, the upper with the grand Hall.

'The present south curtain, though doubtless in its foundations and lower courses of the earlier date, appears to have been reconstructed, possibly by Sir Rhys ap Thomas '. At mid-length is a square tower which does not accord with the angle towers, though it is battlemented and has a small turret. It contained the kitchen and larder, and its erection may have been occasioned by the alterations consequent upon the construction of Sir Rhys's grand Hall.

It is probable that when Sir Rhys ap Thomas , in addition to innumerable minor alterations, including the modernising of practically every window throughout the Castle, transformed the basement chambers beneath his new Hall into a buttery; he provided his dispossessed followers with more comfortable quarters in the Hall on the opposite side of the courtyard.

The outer or base court of the Castle was occupied by stabling and other domestic outbuildings, as well as a Smith's forge, all of them additions of Sir Rhys ap Thomas . Water was obtained from a well which supplied a stone cistern in the quadrangle.

Among Charles Norris drawings is a sketch of a beautiful wheel window that was placed near the entrance to Sir Rhys's great Hall and was in situ about the commencement of last century, but which exists no longer.

The changes effected by Sir John Perrott (d.1592)

The north side of the Castle was practically entirely swept away, and its place taken by a grandiose conception, which was never finished. The destroyed buildings appear to have contained two Long, low chambers, and a Chapel; all of which may have formed part of the work of Sir Rhys ap Thomas .

Civil War.

At the outbreak of the Civil War the tenants were the Phillipses of Picton [Parliamentarians] but it was held for the King in the sieges of March 1644 and August 1645.

During the Civil War the Castle was refortified and the angular 'redan' for guns still survives as a low, grassy bank immediately outside the middle gate house.

In the first attack Laugharne approached Carew with a small party of troopers and a few foot soldiers. The Castle was defended by fifty Musketeers and the Old Rectory was also garrisoned (Leach History of the Civil War in Pembrokeshire and its Borders) Lieut. Jones commanding the Castle garrison marched out to attack but Laugharne charged the musketeers capturing twenty of them including Lieut. Jones who afterwards served in the Parliamentary forces although Laugharne did not capture the Castle or the Old Rectory and in the rest of his campaign just bypassed them.

On the 9th August 1645 after defeating the Royalist forces at Colby Moor and taking Haverfordwest; Laugharne again appeared before Carew Castle.

Owing doubtless to the greater strength of the gateway and eastern curtain, additionally defended as they were by an outer wall and square tower, built by Sir Rhys ap Thomas for effect rather than for serious warfare, and moreover, protected by a dry moat which extended for 30 yards in front of this outer wall, the Parliamentary leaders determined upon attacking the weak south wall. This they managed to breach, doing much damage to the interior face of the gatehouse and the immediately adjoining buildings. By 13th September Carew, Manorbier and Picton castles were all in Parliamentary hands.

A "large Cannon ball found in Carew Castle" was exhibited at Tenby in 1851 to the Cambrian Arch. Association by the Rev. G. N. Smith, then vicar of Gumfreston. At the same meeting Sir. Nicholas Roch exhibited "two small Cannon balls, ploughed up in a field at Paskeston, within range of Carew Castle" (Arch. Camb., 1851, II, ii. 335). They were doubtless relics of the assault upon the medieval Castle in 1644.

Historic Houses.

The Old Rectory.

Within a hundred yards of the parish Church is a residence known as the Old Rectory, which name there can be little doubt, correctly represents its former status. The original house may have been built at the time when Sir Rhys ap Thomas was engaged in modernising the neighbouring Castle, that is, within the period 1490-1510; but it probably suffered from neglect and want of repair until about the middle of last century when it was considerably altered and renewed. Fenton describes it about 1800 as "of a singular appearance, having a square tower on one side through an arched opening, in which, now stopped up, was once the principal residence. It is a large, irregular building, a great part of considerable antiquity, unroofed and in ruins" (Fenton's Tour, p. 271). The low square tower, with its corbel table and newel staircase still remains it should be compared with the square tower in the south curtain of the neighbouring Castle; and a portion of the embattled walls which surrounded the house has also survived.

(Arch. Camb., 1877, IV, viii, 312; 1881, IV, xii, 238).

Mjr Francis Jones records:

Though now a mere farmhouse the place bears traces of considerable antiquity and appears to have been built with an eye to defence. The massive walls are corbelled out beneath the eaves of the roof which is pitched at a steep angle giving the old structure a picturesque appearance. The house has apparently formerly been enclosed within a walled precinct and a tradition tells of "the soldiers" having been quartered there in the turbulent days of old.

Ford.

A farmstead is on Ford Pill between Carew Castle and Paskeston. In the 17th and early 18th centuries it belonged to the Philipps family, a branch of Picton Castle. John Philipps of Goodhook agent to his cousin Sir John Philipps, built the residence at Ford. He was agent in 1650 and was still acting as such in 1699. Sir John wrote a 'memorandum of what Privilege my cozen John Philipps had with me from Picton since 1650', and included among them are the following: 'I gave him as much timber as did build two parts of his house at Ford, and the use of my tenants to carry his slates from Llangolman to Picton Key, and my lighyter to carry them from there to Ford, and to carry his limestone from Williamston Park to Goodhook during the time he lived there, and to carry his corn and household stuff from Goodhook to Ford.'

The Philipps family continued to own Ford for most of the first half of the 18th century. Edward Philipps of Ford died leaving a son and four daughters. John Philipps, the son, matriculated at Jesus College, Oxford, in 1722, and in 1735 was High Sheriff of Pembrokeshire. He died without issue, and the Ford estate passed to his sisters, coheiresses, Elizabeth married John Smith of Jeffreston, Anne married John Relly of Pembroke, Mary married Rev. James Higgon of Haverfordwest, and Katherine married David Rice of London, apothecary. In 1786 John Smith esq.. is described as owner of Ford.

Freestone Hall.

A residence on high ground 1 1/4 miles north-east of Carew Castle.

Lewis in 1840 comments on the site as follows - 'Freestone Hall residence of J. Allen esq.. commanding from the grounds some of the finest views in the county, embracing Lawrenny and its fine estuary, Clareston, and the hundred of Rhos to the west...' The mansion, built by Roger Allen (1734-1782) second son of John Allen of Cresselly, is a three-storeyed main block with a wing stretching to the rear at one side. A good photo was taken of the house by C. S. Allen of Tenby in 1871. James Allen (son of Roger) presented a paten and flagon 'as a New Years Gift' to the parish of Carew in 1844, and further plate was presented by Thomas Allen of Freeston Hall in 1886 in memory of his eldest son Captain Griffith Allen late of H.M. 98th Regiment. In 1910 Freestone Hall 'an old House Mansion now used as a farm' was advertised for sale; it comprised a porch, entrance Hall dining room, parlour, kitchen, Pantry, a large back kitchen, and a dairy and outbuildings. There were 7 bedrooms 78 acres were attached.

Milton

In 1541-2 Richard Gwyther was lessee of the fulling-mill at Milton for 26s 8d. The mill is shown at the same value in the list of King's mills in 1608.

(Cal. Pub Records relating to Pembrokeshire, III 181; Cat. of MSS relating to Wales in the British Museum, I 78)

The grid number refers to Milton township. There is a sixteenth-century water mill, operating tidally on the Carew estuary, close by Milton (SN 041038). (Arch. Camb., 126 (1977), 171.)

Carew Tidal Mill - The French Mill.

The present mill dates from 16 century. First mentioned in 1541 but there was an earlier one on site. From late 1700's until 1937 the Mill was constantly in use, milling barley, oat meal, wheat flour, bone meal and fertilisers. At one time there were two working water wheels, each driven by water as it was released from the mill pond. The pond was filled at high tide. It was restored by G Argent Builders 1972.

Milton waterworks, built in 1898 to pump water from Milton springs to supply the nearby towns of Pembroke and Pembroke Dock. It was built on the site of an early mill. The village pump was restored by local people and the Carew Wesley Youth group. Nearby, linked by a short straight sided Canal to RadFord Pill, there is an old stone quarry where during the 19c the blue grey Carboniferous Limestone was extensively quarried for use as building stone and the production of lime for agricultural use.

Milton House.

A residence, half a mile north-west of Carew Cheriton Church, marked on Colby's map as 'Milton House' within grounds on the edge of Milton village. Comparatively modern, it was owned by the Revd. William Holcombe in 1786, with William Phelps as tenant. By the early 1830s William Bowen was living at Milton House, being the first of that family there which was to continue there for nearly a century and a half.

Lewis wrote in 1834: 'Within the parish are several gentlemen's seats of which the principal are Milton House formerly part of the extensive estate of Upton Castle, and now the property and residence of William Bowen esq., an elegant modern mansion pleurably situated within grounds.'

William Bowen's sister had married James Summers of Haverfordwest, Clerk of the Peace, and it was to his nephew, James Summers, he left Milton House. James Summers then added Bowen to his name; James Bowen Summers settled there and was High Sheriff in 1874. He was followed by his son Sutton Bowen Summers, who sold Milton House after the Second World War.

It is now a hotel.

Welston.

A modern residence of fair pretensions. It stands upon the site of an earlier house of the same name, occupied by a Mr. Cuney about the middle of the 17th century. Cromwell, on his way to the siege of Pembroke in May, 1648 is said, with much probability to have had his quarters here, and Fenton states that in his time a lady, who was a descendant of the family of Cuney, then possessed a quilted counterpane that covered the General's bed; white lined with crimson and stained with ink spilt as he was writing one of his despatches during his confinement in his room with gout (Fentons Tour, p373). An adjoining field is still known as Bowling alley.

According to Mjr. Francis Jones:

Home of the Cuny family. The present house stands on the site of an earlier house of the same name occupied by a member of the Cuny family in the middle of the 17th century. It was pulled down early in the 19th century. When Cromwell was besieging Pembroke he made Welston his HQ. According to Fenton: '... there is a quilted counterpane of White linen that covered Cromwell's bed still in the possession of a lady, a descendant of that house, stained with ink spilled as he was writing one of his despatches during his confinement'. The 'confinement' refers to the tyrant's attack of gout which obliged him to stay in bed for a few days. In the will of Richard Cuny of Pembroke dated 24th October 1627 he mentioned four of his farms which he left to his son Walter Cuny including 'Welshtowne' (Welston). Walter was still in possession in 1638, and it was in Walter's time that Cromwell commandeered the house. Walter was Mayor of Pembroke when he died. His daughter married Francis Parry to whom there is a marble tablet in St. Mary's Church, Pembroke (See Thomas Roscoe's Wanderings and Excursions in South Wales, 1836, p. 154). By the 18th century the Cunys had moved to Golden near Pembroke.

In 1834 the property, described as 'a substantial modern house' was the seat of George Donne (or Dunn) esq.. The Dunns still had it in 1873 but in 1904 John Evans was owner of the freehold.

Carew Church

See also Spurrell, History of Carew 1921 and The History of St Marys Church Carew - Robert Scourfield MA 1994. Acknowledgements also to Thomas Lloyd for historical information

- The original Parish Church location and dedication seem lost in the mists of time. Probably the original dedication should be The Church of The blessed Virgin Mary, Carew. Certainly around the time it was built (it is mentioned by Giraldus c.1200) it was described just as the Church of Carew. It paid tax in 1291, Hugh Brumhull was Parson in 1375 and the list of Rectors starts at 1382. But the original Church may not have been on the site of the Church built in the 14th century. The village and Church may have been much nearer the Castle like most villages that used a local Castle for protection. It has been suggested that an earlier Church existed nearer the Castle site as it was a position of defence before the Normans came (and was part of the Welsh possessions of Princess Nest). The Carew Cross itself proves that the Castle area was occupied in pre-Norman times. Was the cross standing on its own (unlike the one at Nevern) because it was originally connected with a Church that has long gone? We know the cross has been moved at least three times – but where was the original site?

The Church doubtless has been restored on several occasions (and possibly re-dedicated to St John during the Victorian period due to concerns over impure or catholic influences associated with Mary Magdelene and the Virgin Mary respectively). But its main constructional features show it to have been built in the late years of the 14th or early part of the 15th century. It comprises chancel (41 feet by 18 feet), nave (61 feet by 20 feet), north transept, known as the Carew aisle (29 feet by 17 feet), south transept (16 feet by 10 feet), north and south aisles and west tower (25 feet square). The structure is usually regarded as the work of Bishop Gower (1328 - 1347) but, while much of the detail resembles the work of that Bishop at St Davids, the building appears to be slightly later, and to have borrowed from the cathedral Church some of Gower's ornamental features of the early half of the 14th century. The tower departs widely from the local type, and is one of the few in the county having angle buttresses. The English proclivities of the Carew family, the early possessors of the Castle, whose favourite place of residence was their ancestral Devon, are repeated Throughout the edifice, both in its architecture and interior arrangements. There are several tombs and monumental slabs to departed Carews, ranging from the 14th to the 17th centuries.

The Beginnings

The foundation date of St Marys is uncertain. The dedication to St Mary rather than a Welsh saint suggests a Norman establishment, even though nothing remains of that period. The large Scale of the Church is surprising for a small rural community – this is due to the patronage of the wealthy Carew family of Carew Castle which lasted until the mid-seventeenth century. Structurally, the earliest surviving part of St Mary's is the chancel and possibly also the north transept dating from c.1340. The nave and aisles were rebuilt around the middle of the fifteenth century and the fine west tower added c.1500.

The dominating tower is unusually grand for Pembrokeshire and is more akin to those in the Bristol region. Trade between nearby Tenby and Bristol did lead to adoption of west Country ideas in some local churches such as St Mary's Tenby. Rich in Tudor detail as it is now, it was until the early nineteenth century topped with richly carved pinnacles. The west door was inserted in 1836 and an elaborate Perpendicular west window replaced in 1857. There is little else of interest on the exterior, although the older chancel and north transept can easily be distinguished by their characteristic buttresses.

Inside, though monumental, the Church presents a stark appearance after two centuries of over enthusiastic restoration. It is a rewarding exercise to stand at the rear of the Church and imagine it in its original splendour. Across the chancel arch until the early nineteenth century was a fine Perpendicular oak screen which was probably highly coloured. Above was the rood-loft whose purpose was to house the Crucifix. Further colour would have existed on the tombs, effigies and possibly the walls. Not one, but three altars once existed in St Marys – the present one, one in the south aisle and one in the north transept. Off the chancel in the present vestry was the Carew family Chapel Long since cleared of its altar and tombs. Above all this was the crowning glory – a fine C.15th carved compass roof with coloured bosses and cornice. Vicar Lloyd compared it in 1844, six years after its removal, to that in the south aisle of Tenby Church.

The present plaster ceiling was inserted by Richard Barrett, surveyor from Pembroke, who had in 1836 inserted the west door and built a timber gallery over it. This work cost £300 – a burdensome sum for 1838 – Vicar Hamilton wearily wrote in April 1844 of the parishioner's opposition to the work who stated, "What did for their forefathers will do for them."

By 1856, the Church was in a deplorable state. Pews of various shapes, sizes and orientation lay shattered and rotten, the gallery was collapsing and the windows were broken, the latter by local school boys. The London architect, David Brandon, in 1856, set about restoring the Church in accordance with new ecclesiological tenets. This basically meant re-establishing the importance of the altar which in Georgian times was often rivalled by the pulpit – eighteenth century "preaching box" churches were unfashionable by the 1850's. Brandon thus re-pewed the Church and also installed five new windows including the west window, commemorating those fallen in the Crimean War. When the work was finished the Church looked much as it does now. All the other windows were replaced between 1879 -1912. In 1908-1910, the architect W.D. Caroe restored the chancel, his work including the odd revelation of the window quoins from behind the stucco. Disaster struck in 1926 when the tower was hit by lightning, its partial collapse smashing pews and windows.

The Church Today.

The Chancel.

To gain a clear picture of the development of St Marys, it is best to begin a tour in the oldest surviving part – the chancel. This was apparently rebuilt c.1340 by Bishop Gower of St David's. The flowing decorated gothic tracery of the north and south windows, painstakingly reproduced in 1893, certainly attest to this date. Still intact is the triple arched sedilia (priests seat) and the fine cusped piscine (basin for washing the Communion vessels) adjacent. Of a more mysterious date is the protruding carved head on the jamb of the North west window. Who, if anyone, it depicts is unknown.

The stained east window representing the Resurrection dates from 1879 and is by Alexander Gibbs & Co of London. The chancel furnishings are all relatively modern. The altar and reredos are both war memorials and were installed in 1923, being designed by the architect John Coates-Carter. The altar rail and choir stalls are modern, but suitable in style. Before the altar are laid an excellent mixture of medieval tiles mostly dating from the fifteenth century, some originating from Carew Castle.

The effigies on the north wall were placed there in 1834.

The westernmost figure is thought to be Sir Nicholas Carew who died in 1311, while the other is an early C.14th priest.

On the south side is a medieval effigy of a Child, her head supported on angels with a hound at her feet.

The present vestry to the north was originally a Chapel belonging to the Carew family and probably dates from the fourteenth century. Although long emptied, it retains a pointed stone vaulted roof, a piscine and a “squint” window allowing a view of the main altar from within.

The North Transept

It is uncertain as to how far Gower proceeded with his rebuilding. Certainly the south transeptal (Organ) arch is coeval with Gower's chancel arch. The great thickness of this transept arch with the existence of extra mouldings on its rear face suggests that a grand large Church with central tower and two transepts was planned. Perhaps through lack of money or onset of plague, the scheme was dropped. The north transept seems to have been built shortly after this decision, its arch being more sparse in detail than the other two and being thinner, no longer having to support an intended central tower. What detail survives inside and out still points to the fourteenth century. The sole original feature in the transept is the cusped piscine hidden behind the end of a pew. The pallid east window of 1912 is by A.L. Moore and depicts Christ the Good Shepherd.

The railed chest-tomb is of Sir John Carew (d.1637) whose wife outlived him and was buried elsewhere. On its far side can be seen their five daughters, all kneeling except the middle one who died in infancy and on the other side kneel their three sons.

The Nave and Aisles

The nave was rebuilt c.1450 along with the aisles. The detail admittedly is poor and sparse and why the south arcade slews so badly is uncertain, although a guess would be that it was the result of hacking back a tower arch pier and respond built and abandoned by Gower. The building of the west tower in c.1500 completed St Mary's at last. Again the nave has been badly restored. Its flat headed perpendicular gothic windows were taken out of the south aisle in 1857 by David Brandon and replaced by the highly unsuitable pointed decorated gothic ones, so beloved of the mid-Victorians. The north aisle windows followed suit in 1883. The west window is Brandons perpendicular admission of 1857 although it replaced a much more ornate example. The font is a copy of the original dating from 1844. The monuments in the south aisle are all Victorian and two are worth notice – that of little George Llewellyn (d.1871) by J. Phillips of Pembroke Dock with its inset portrait roundel and the excellent monument to William and Hannah Bowen (1845) by J. Evan Thomas of London, a Welsh born sculptor whose prominent local work is the statue of Prince Albert on the Castle Hill, Tenby. Also in the south aisle is the aumbry once used to hold sacred vessels.

The porch is probably also late fifteenth century, retaining its stone benches and a niche which was either a stoup or housed a statuette of St Mary.

The Charnel House

This is situated alongside the path leading to the Church from the main gate and was built in the fourteenth century as a repository for bones with a Chapel above. The bone holes are still visible, especially that on the south side. The outline of the altar window is visible, being blocked in the seventeenth century and a chimney inserted. Inside survives a stoup, two altar niches with brackets and a piscine. Since at least 1625 the building was used as a schoolroom (until 1872 when a new school was built at the top of the village) and until 1840, the vault underneath provided shelter for paupers. Today, it is used as a Sunday Schoolroom.

On 24. July 1610, a lease of the rectory of Carew for 21 years was granted to Thomas Newsham of Abergwilly Carms., gent. - Chapter Acts.

Under the heading 'Livings Discharged:' - Carew V (St. John Baptist). Bishop of St Davids Impr. and Patr. Clear yearly value, £14. - Bacon's Liber Regis.

1535 The Rector's living at Carew was valued at £44 annually. It was one of the most wealthy in the county.

Between 1689 and 1750 the roof of the Church was substantially repaired with constant purchases of new slates and timber a description of 1831 suggests that it had a wagon roof which was replaced in 1838 and in 1725 the Church was whitewashed.

1807 a singing master had been engaged to instruct the congregation in singing.

1834 A Chalice and cover were sold to a Salisbury SilverSmith it weighed 23ozs 10d wt. It was suggested that it was Elizabethan or Jacobean and was sold for 4s 10d per ounce. This could well have been the one described as Communion Cup with cover of silver and double gilt in the inventory of 1547.

The Norman font was replaced at a cost of £3 5s in 1836 by an exact copy of the original using limestone from Williamston Quarry.

1843 the two effigies in the north of the chancel were moved to their present position from the east of the porch.

1850 a new oak pulpit was installed and also a new reading desk.

1855 Restoration by G.G. Scott started.

1857 Carew Church restoration completed.

The Rood screen was removed by Rev. Pritchett and the canopied oak seats at the west end of the chancel by Rev. Rees.

The ancient west window with its portrayal of the nativity was totally destroyed and replaced by a memorial to those who had fallen in the Crimean war in 1857. At the same time most of the other windows which originally had been flat perpendicular were replaced.

The interior walls of the Church had been limed brown, with (according to the Church accounts) stonework picked out in black.

1881 The tower was refurbished including having the roof renewed.

1888 The Chancel, nave and Carew aisle re-roofed.

1889 stucco was put on the interior walls of the Church.

In the churchyard is a Chapel on a vaulted chamber which was originally used as an ossuary. The vault was divided by a wall and occupied by two female paupers up to 1840.

The parish registers go back to 1718 and there are Bishop's Transcripts dating from 1685.

Critchurch

This is the site of a hamlet Chapelry which is spelt Christchurch in the churchwardens' accounts for 1672. It possessed the right of burial, and human remains have been found in an adjacent quarry (Spurrell, Hist. Carew 71).

Non-Conformist Churches

Pisgah – Baptist.

The Chapel was part of the Moleston circuit but preaching had occurred in homes from an earlier time. In 1838 the membership was 60.

Messrs. William Davies (Cresselly), John Thomas (Oak Hill) Lewis Thomas, Thomas Nicholas (The Grove), Benjamin Phillip, (New Brittain), John Cole (Williamston), Benjamin Davies (Pencoed), and Abraham Prickett, who were the pioneers of this cause, held services for some time at Pencoed, the residence of Mr. Benjamin Davies. In 1819, these Baptists secured a plot of land about a mile from Pencoed, and erected a Chapel on the site of which the present Sanctuary now stands. The Church was constitutionally formed in 1820. It was fostered in its infancy by Rev. James Hughes Thomas, Waterholmes, He was succeeded by Rev. Enoch Price who was also minister of Molleston. Following him was Rev. Henry Evans, who ministered here for twelve years.

Another well-known minister was Rev David Phillips, who served this Church for twenty-three years: the first eleven conjointly with Molleston. He died in 1875, aged 72 years, and is interred in Molleston Baptist Burial Ground.

In 1875, this Church united with Martletwy and Rev. Thos. Lodwig Evans, who was completing College studies at Haverfordwest, was invited to serve the Church. His ministry extended for eight years, He was succeeded by Rev. Thomas Pandy John during whose three year ministry the manse was erected.

Other early ministers included Rev. W M Morris, Rev. Jesse Roberts and Rev. S Howells.

The land for the Chapel Schoolroom, Dwelling House, Garden and Burial Ground were given by Henry Seymour Allen of Cresselly House.

In 1851 the return states that the general congregation is 200.

Carew Newton – Independent.

The Chapel was built in 1862 and it came under the direction of the minister of Horeb Chapel in Martletwy; although previously it had been a branch of Bethel at St Florence.

Nebo

In the 1851 census an Independent Chapel called Nebo is recorded erected in 1836 and having an average attendance of 20 in the morning and 50 in the afternoon.

Carew - Wesley Methodist.

This Chapel was built as part of the Pembroke Circuit in 1816 although a society was formed earlier

- Probably about 1807.

The return for 1851 gives an average congregation of 130.

St Deiniol.(ref to Carew)

In 1602 Thomas Williams copied what he described as a very ancient manuscript. This manuscript had been part of the library of Bangor cathedral till the reformation. His copy is now in the Peniarth collection, this manuscript (MS 226) contained Lessons and a Collect commemorating St Deiniol. The Lessons were used on the Saint's day but do not describe the life and work of the Saint at Bangor.

This is peculiar because it seems very unusual for Lessons on a Saint's Day (especially a Saint who had spent most of his life in the area) to commemorate his work elsewhere. It seems to predate the Norman Conquest by a good margin. And if the Norman bishops could have changed these lessons they would have done so. Well what do these lessons have to do with Carew? The lessons describe St Deniol's life on the Hill above what is now Pembroke at his hermitage between 516 AD and 535 AD and one of them refers to his well and the healing

“Again a certain woman from the district of Caerw (Carew), in the diocese of Mynyw, was so swollen beyond measure that she could find no relief by any advice of physicians. At last, coming to the Church of St Deniol, and afterwards to the aforementioned well, and imploring the Saint's help, she drank of that water so as to regain health and, before leaving came to the entrance of the Church, and cast forth from her mouth, while many stood by and observed, three horrible worms, each with four feet, and the woman was made whole from that very hour.”

(I wonder whether the original said with four feet or whether it described the worms as being 4 ft long?)

Names Connected With Carew Parish

Princess Nesta

Nesta (“Nest ferch Rhys” in Welsh) was the daughter of Rhys ap Tewdwr. (He was killed in 1094 by Norman Knights employed by his cousin). After her father was killed she was made a ward of Court. She was fabulously beautiful and had numerous offspring (the eldest one a son of Henry I was appointed duke of Gloucester).

When the King married (his wife did not approve of his mistress and bastards being at court) he arranged that she should marry Gerald de Windsor who was appointed custodian of Pembroke Castle.

Her part of the inheritance from her father was large estates around Carew near Pembroke.

A writer at the time said of her: "daughter and sister of a prince, wife of an adventurer, concubine of a King, paramour of every daring lover..., a Welsh woman whose passions embroiled all Wales, and England too, in war..., mother of heroes, grandmother of Giraldus Cambrensis"

Another writer said: "Henry I was no more restrained in his passions than any other powerful ruler of the 12c. It made little difference to him that the beautiful Nest, daughter of the Welsh Prince Rhys ap Tudor, had been placed in his care as a royal ward; (she was William Refus's hostage for the good behaviour of her family). He fell in love with Nest and seduced her, and she bore him a son.

In those days, however, there was an accepted way of dealing with such a situation. Nest's baby son was named duke of Gloucester. When Henry had to make a political marriage and his new wife had reservations about Nest at court; King Henry gave Nest in marriage to one of his barons, Gerald de Windsor - who was at that time in disgrace at court. Gerald took his new wife with him to South Wales.

The Children of Nest - their family names.

Henry FitzRoy (FitzHenry) - (Illegitimate son of Henry I). Killed in battle against Owain Gwynedd in Anglesey 1157. He had a son, Fitzhenry who was Justiciary of Ireland in 1199 (Visited by Gerald of Wales in that year).

William FitzGerald (de Carew) - son of Gerald de Windsor - adopted the style of "de Carew" although he could have been another son of Henry I. (One of his sons Baldwin de Carro took part in the Third Crusade in 1191).

Maurice FitzGerald – son of Gerald de Windsor - one of the principle leaders of the invasion of Ireland. In 1174 held the Castle and the county of Wicklow. Died 1177.

David FitzGerald – son of Gerald de Windsor - Bishop of St Davids died 1176.

Angharad – daughter of Gerald de Windsor - married William de Barry they had three children. Robert de Barry, Phillip de Barry and Gerald of Wales (c 1146 -1223).

Robert FitzStephen – son of Stephen the Constable - seriously wounded in a battle against Owain Gwynedd after a sea borne attack on Anglesey 1157. (Henry FitzRoy was killed in the same battle). 1166 Castellan of Cardigan Castle- betrayed to the Welsh under Rhys ap Gruffydd by a Welsh cleric Rhigyfarch - was imprisoned but released in time to take part in the Invasion of Ireland in 1170. Travelled through Leinster with Dermot King of Leinster. (According to Giraldus in his book on Ireland).

Owain Fitzroy - eldest son of Cadwgan, who had seen Nesta at a Feast at Cilgerran Castle – (she was his second cousin) - saw fit to set fire to Castle outbuildings in order to carry her off to Powys. Afterwards he was constrained by the King to restore her to Gerald de Windsor - he refused and she had two children by Owain.

Henry I raised an army invaded Ceredigion and devastated it - Owain escaped to Ireland- later he returned and succeeded to part of Powys but Gerald had not forgotten. While assembling to fight side by side for the King against Gruffydd ap Rhys - Gerald de Windsor and his men turned on Owain Fitzroy's men and slew Owain.

Gerald de Windsor ended his warlike career by dying peacefully at his wife's Castle of Carew (c1136) but his wife's career was not finished thereby. Though her children were now grown up and married, Nest still had her beauty. She transferred her affections to Stephen, Constable of Cardigan Castle and then to the Sheriff of Pembroke, presenting each of them with a son.

Carew – (Old Pembrokeshire Families Henry Owen)

Of all the families who held sway under the Earls of Pembroke this is in many ways the most distinguished. Few in the Kingdom can be traced with so much distinctness during the whole of its long career, and the home of the race, built by its Norman founder, has remained to the present day (with one short interval) in the possession of his descendants. It is also remarkable for the number of noble families which branched off from it. From Carew Castle came (among others) the

Fitz Geralds, the foremost among the conquerors of Ireland, the elder branch of whom became Earls of Kildare and Dukes of Leinster; the

Fitz Maurices, Earls of Kerry and Marquises of Lansdowne; the Graces, Barons of Courtstown, and the Gerrards, Lords Gerrard.

All these settled in Ireland, and furnish an interesting example of the origin of family names.

From William, the brother of Gerald, founder of the house of Carew came the Lords Windsor and the Earls of Plymouth.

The representatives of the family who remained in this county soon adopted the territorial title of de Carew although they are occasionally called in the records De Windsor, from the earlier home. From an early date they had held lands in the west of England, and their possessions there were, later, much increased by marriages with heiresses when they made their English home their principal residence. From Carew Castle came many of the Carews and Careys who rose to fame and Fortune in Devon, Cornwall, and Somerset, and it may be noted that the distinguished General of Pembrokeshire descent, spells his name Vole, Carew but pronounces it Voole Carey, or rather did so until a regrettable incident in 1879 made the name Carey distasteful to him. Another form of the name is Carrow, once familiar in South Pembrokeshire, and still happily represented in the county. Richard Carew the Elizabethan historian of Cornwall, says:—

“Carew of ancient, Carru was. And Carru is a plough; Roman's the trade. Frenchmen the word, I do the name avow.”

But however this may be as to some bearers of the name, the historian himself drew his name from our Carew which is certainly Welsh, and not French, and most probably means Caerau, the camps, still perceived in the local pronunciation of Carey Castle. Another learned Carew was also in error as to his origin; Earl George of Totness, has left in his handwriting, among the Carew MSS., a pedigree tracing the family from Adam de Montgomery, which is recorded at the Heralds' College, but the charter of King John mentioned below shows that it is as fictitious as those of the bards, or of the late Sir Bernard Buike.

There is a fable that among the numerous foreigners at the Court of Edward the Confessor was a certain Dominus Otho, said to have come from Florence, who had a son Walter Fitz Otho, who held the important post of Castellan of Windsor, and who had two sons by a Welsh wife, William, the progenitor of the De Windsors, as above stated, and Gerald, who came to Pembroke with the first Norman invaders under Arnulph de Montgomery, in the reign of William Rufus.

De Windsor, Gerald was made Castellan of Pembroke by Arnulph, but on the disgrace of the latter in 1102 for his rebellion in favour of the King's brother, Robert, he was replaced by one Saer. However, two years later he was reinstated by Henry I. This was doubtless owing to his having married the mistress of that King, Nesta, the Welsh, princess, who has been styled the "Helen of Wales". Nesta brought him as her dower Carew and lands in Emlyn, and Henry granted him the lordship of Moulsoford, in Berks, which long remained with the family of Carew. He had three sons:

William, who took the name of de Carew;

Maurice who called himself Fitz Gerald, and was the forefather of the great Geraldine race in Ireland; and he had also a daughter,

David, who became Bishop of St David's, and died in 1177;

Angharad, who married William de Barri of Manorbier.

de Carew William married Katherine de Kingsley a daughter of Sir Adam de Kingsley in Cheshire, and, notwithstanding his Welsh, blood, he spent most of his life in fighting the Welsh, as his father did before him. In 1135 he was defeated by them near Cardigan; in 1147 he took from them the Castle of Carmarthen, then held by Meredith ap Griffith, and in the year following that of Wiston. After this it is curious to read, that when the Welsh, in 1152, captured Tenby Castle, they handed it over to William so perhaps the Welsh, blood counted for something after all.

William confirmed the grant by Jordan de Cantinton, a well-known man in North Pembrokeshire, of the Church of Castellan in Emlyn to the Preceptory of Slebech, and died in 1173. He had four sons:

de Carew Otho who succeeded to Carew;

de Carew Raymond, "the bravest and wisest of the conquerors of Ireland"; and de Carew William, who also settled in Ireland. Another son, de Carew Gerald, had been killed at Camrose by the men of Roose, upon whom his family took dire vengeance.

de Carew Otho married Margaret Fitz Tancred daughter of Richard Fitz Tancred Castellan of Haverford. Fenton tells us that “there were few men of rank among the Flemish settlers, but we find the son of one of these settlers allied by marriage with the two great Norman houses of Carew and Manorbier. Otho, soon after his father's death, got into trouble with the Welsh, who took from him his Castle of Emlyn, but he obtained from Henry II the manor of Bampton, co. Oxon., so long as the Welsh, held Emlyn. He began the long connection of the Carews with Devon, by acquiring Brunton in that county," and he confirmed his father's gift of the vill of Redberth to Slebech. He was a witness to the grant of Trefduauk (St. Edrens) to St David's by Robert Fitz Elidor. He died about 1204, leaving as his successor his son de Carew William, who was accused of rebellion against King John in 1207. William had to pay forty marks of gold for a charter from that King, confirming to him the manor of Moultsford, which charter sets out his descent as above stated; and in 1212 he was restored to his house at Carrio (Carew), and the other lands which he held on the day upon which the King embarked for Ireland from Pembroke two years before. William died soon afterwards, and was succeeded by his son Richard.

de Carew Richard wife's name was Scholastica. His brother and son were successively bishops of St David's (i.e., Thomas Wallensis in 1248 and Richard de Carew in 1256). This is evident from a charter of the last named, although it is not so stated in the history books. Besides the Bishop who made his mark on the history of St David's, Richard had an elder son.

de Carew William Lord of Carew who in 1247 held five Knight's fees in Pembroke, which in the Mareschal division were assigned, like Manorbier, to Joan de Munchensy.

de Carew Sir Nicholas was a man of mark; of his local influence we have had great evidence. In 1298 he was a witness to the charter of Philip of Angle to William de la Roche. In 1301 he signed the famous letter of the Parliament of Lincoln to the Pope, asserting the feudal dependence of Scotland on the English crown, not as Lord of Carew where he was a tenant of the Earl of Pembroke, but as Lord of Moultsford, and in the same year was summoned by Edward I to the host against the Scots. He bore as arms the famous black lions passant of the Carews, and he died in 1311, having in his lifetime granted his lands in Carlow, Ireland, to his son.

de Carew John who in 1317 was ordered by writ of military summons to go to Ireland to defend those lands from Edward Bruce, the brother of the more famous Robert, who, after Bannockburn, nearly overran the whole of that country.

de Carew Beatrice, the sister of John, had married Richard de Barri and brought him Begelly as her dowry. John de Carew died in 1324 and his son de Carew Nicholas dying a few months afterwards was succeeded by his brother

de Carew Thomas of whom the only fact recorded is that when in 1332 he was indicted for taking away from Manorbier the goods of David de Barri. During the great law-suit, he refused to appear on the ground that the writ against him was not sealed with the proper seal. Unhappily we are not told whether this defence was admitted, apparently it was.

It is not quite clear whether de Carew Sir John, the next Lord, was the son of Thomas de Carew or his nephew, probably the latter. He was Lord deputy of Ireland in the reign of Edward III, and had large possessions in Devon which had devolved upon him through the marriages of his ancestors with the heiresses of the Peverels and the Mohuns. He held at Carew in 1348 five Knight's fees worth 100 marks, and among his advowsons, that of St. Bride's, taxed at 16 marks. He also held a Canonry in the Collegiate Church of Llanddewi Brefi, with the prebend of Dihewid, of the value of 10 marks.

Good Bishop Beck had founded this Church in 1287, as a place of spiritual joy, with advowsons of Cardigan churches, which Edward I had confiscated and given to him, but the prebends soon got into lay hands, and were treated as sinecures. Sir John died in 1362, leaving a widow de Carew Elizabeth (apparently his second wife), who had the manor of Lawrenny as part of her dower. His son de Carew Leonard survived his father seven years, and died in Gascony in the suite of the Earl of Pembroke, leaving a son de Carew Thomas , then aged two years. This Thomas lived to what was in those days a ripe old age, and died in 1431. Like his father he was a warrior; in 1416 he was serving in France, and in the next year was ordered by the Privy Council to prosecute the war at sea. He married Bonville, Elizabeth, daughter of Sir John Bonville a west country family, who held lands in Pembrokeshire and gave their name to Bonville's Court. In 1404 the sum of £200 was ordered by the Council to be paid to him for the wages of men at arms to guard the castles of Carmarthen and Emlyn, and his account for the custody of Narberth Castle is extant, shewing that he paid £90 10s. 10d. as wages to ten men at arms and fifty archers, from the 1st November 1402, to the 24th April 1404.

de Carew Nicholas the son of Thomas , married Joan Courtenay daughter and heiress of Sir Hugh Courtenay of Haccombe, co. Devon. He died in 1447, leaving four sons:

Carew Thomas ,

Carew Nicholas of Haccombe, the ancestor of the Carew baronets;

Carew Alexander of Antony, from whom came Richard Carew the antiquary, and the family of Pole-Carew; and Carew William, the ancestor of the present owner of Carew.

Notwithstanding their vast possessions and their judicious marriages, the Carews soon after this time fell, through improvidence, upon evil days.

Carew Edmund, the grandson of the last mentioned Thomas Carew mortgaged Carew Castle to Sir Rhys ap Thomas , who held there the famous Tournament of St. George . On the attainder of Rhys ap Griffith, the grandson and heir of Sir Rhys, who had foreclosed the mortgage, it was forfeited to the Crown.

Carew Edmund went to the wars, and was killed in France. He left two sons : Carew William, the father of Carew Sir Peter (frequently called Carrow in the State Papers), who tried to retrieve the fallen fortunes of the house by recovering the ancient possessions of the Carews in Ireland, which had passed from them for two centuries, and died there in 1575; and

Carew George, the father of Carew George, Lord Carew and Earl of Totness, who succeeded to his cousin's unlawful heritage. He was a friend and contemporary of George Owen and was himself a considerable antiquary, as his collection, which is now at Lambeth Palace, most amply testifies.

Carew Castle was granted by Queen Mary to Sir John Perrot, and it is to him and to Sir Rhys ap Thomas, the mortgagee of Carew that we owe much of the beautiful buildings whose ruins are so well-known to us. After Perrot's attainder, Carew was granted to different persons on different tenures until, in the reign of James I, the old family came back.

Carew William, the son of Carew Nicholas had married Elizabeth Biccombe the daughter and heiress of Hugh Biccombe of Crowcombe, in Somerset, and their son,

Carew Sir John, was able to buy up certain outstanding interests and to obtain a grant in fee from the Crown. Sir John Carew died in 1637. During his lifetime he erected a magnificent monument to himself, his wife, and family, in Carew Church. He does not seem to have lived at Carew much, for it appears by the Church Wardens' accounts of the parish, which date from 1619, that at that date, and during Sir John's life, the Castle and demesnes were in the occupation of

Phillipps, Sir John of Picton, and of his son

Phillipps, Sir Richard but from 1667 to 1676 they were held by his (Sir John Carew's) son Carew George. Sir John Carew held in his own hands Summerton, Cotchland, Rickeston and Radford; he was Sheriff of Pembrokeshire in 1623.

Carew George was Sheriff in 1640, and was the last Carew who lived there, for in 1643 the Castle, which was held for the King in the Civil Wars, and was even then a place of great strength, was surrendered "upon quarter" and dismantled."

Carew John, the son of George Carew died without issue, and Carew went to the descendants of his (George's) elder brother,

Carew Thomas, of Crowcombe. Thomas Carew died in 1766 leaving two daughters as joint heiresses to the Carew estates. One died unmarried the other

Carew Mary in 1794, married George Henry Warrington who took the name of Carew. – His grandson Colonel Carew who died in 1874, left a son who died without issue, and a daughter Ethel Mary Carew the lineal descendant of Gerald Fitz Walter; she married the Hon. R. C. Trollope.

The present descendants and owners are the Trollope-Bellews of Crowcombe Court

Sir Rice (Rhys) ap Thomas

Sir Rhys ap Thomas, (1449-1525), the flamboyant and controversial Welsh military leader inherited the estates of Dinefwr, including Carew on his father's death. Thomas was the definition of Welsh chivalry. A brave Lord and knight, fierce in battle and love, he played a major role in Henry Tudor's victory over King Richard III at the Battle of Bosworth Field in 1485, a turning point in British history. Rhys was knighted on the battlefield and made Governor of Wales, by the now King Henry VII. By the time the Tudor's came to power though, the age of chivalry was drawing quickly to a close. The last great Welsh tournament of knights was staged by Sir Rhys ap Thomas at Carew in 1507. spread over five days, the tournament drew over six hundred knights and retainers, with Rhys presiding over and judging the various contests. The sight was a marvel to behold. Chroniclers of the time wrote how the tournament was still the topic of conversation years after its conclusion.

He died at the age of 76 and left behind him only one son born in wedlock but no less than 14 natural children most of whom founded or married into some of the leading families in South Wales.

Sir John Perrot

Reputed to be the son of Henry VIII and Mary Berkeley who later married Sir Thomas Perrot. John was probably born at Haroldston in 1527 but later resided chiefly at Carew and Laugharne. In 1577, during the reign of Elizabeth I, the Privy Council sent an indignant letter to Sir John Perrot cataloguing the misdeeds of John Callice "whereas their Lordships are given to understand that one John Callice, a notable pirate frequenting that county and arriving lately at Milford was lodged and housed at Haverfordwest, and being there Known was suffered to escape, their Lordships do not a little marvel at the negligence of such as are Justices in those parts".

(According to Sir John Perrot by G Douglas James).

The Elizabethan Era was perhaps the most glorious in our island history and one in which we can take great pride.

It saw the first fruits of the three outstanding events, the Renaissance, the Discovery of America and the Reformation, movements which revolutionised the activities and minds of the people of the western World and when the people of our country passed to maturity and awakening, and awoke to the possibilities of a more intense and adventurous life of development.

With Elizabeth as its head, Burleigh as its eminent statesman, Shakespeare as the prince of dramatists, Bacon the great philosopher, Philip Sidney and Spencer its outstanding poets; Raleigh, Drake, Frobisher, its intrepid sailors, our country produced a galaxy of talent which, perhaps, has never been surpassed.

During this era our own county was the birthplace of one who, although he did not attain the eminence of the above named figures was a very remarkable man who played a prominent part in those stirring times by nationally and locally. He was Sir John Perrott! a natural son of Henry VIII, to whom he bore a remarkable resemblance in appearance voice and temperament. His mother was Mary Berkeley, a lady of the Court and wife of Sir Thomas Perrot, a direct descendant of one of the Conqueror's entourage.

He was born at Haroldston, just outside the borough of Haverfordwest and he was, Throughout his life, the Outstanding personality in South Wales.

From his earliest years he was noted for his ruffling ways, his prowess in athletics, his great strength and courage, and notorious for his arbitrary ways and ungovernable temper.

He was Mayor of Haverfordwest in 1570, 1575 and 1576, Member of Parliament for Carmarthenshire, 1548-52, for Pembrokeshire, 1563-67 and Haverfordwest in 1588.

In 1551 he was High Sheriff for Pembrokeshire and (1584-88).

Later Vice-Admiral for west Wales in which latter office he was responsible for the suppression of piracy, but he undoubtedly shared the booty of many a valuable cargo.

He was a great friend of Edward VI, who made him a Knight of the Bath, and although nothing was said of any acknowledgement of his parentage the relationship was frankly acknowledged by Edward VI, Mary and Elizabeth.

During the reign of Mary he was imprisoned for favouring Protestantism and harbouring heretics at Haroldston, but was released on her death.

Elizabeth granted him many favours. He was one of four who carried the canopy at her Coronation. She appointed him Lord President of Munster to quell the Desmond Rebellion, which he did in twelve months. She then appointed him Lord President of Munster to quell the Desmond Rebellion, which he did in twelve months, and then returned to Haroldston and later to the Lordship of Carew Castle. Subsequently he was appointed Lord Deputy of Ireland.

In 1591 he was falsely accused of High Treason, being denounced, it is said by Thomas Cadern of Prendergast. He was condemned to death, but Elizabeth refused to sign the death warrant as she knew he was innocent and resolved to pardon him, but before the warrant was signed he died in the Tower of London and was buried in St. Peter's Church there.

His portrait, which hangs in the Shire Hall Haverfordwest, and presented to the County by Sir Charles E. G. Philipps, Bart., of Picton Castle, is a copy of the original painting in the possession of Sir John Pakington, Bart., of Twickenham and formerly of Westwood, Worcestershire, a direct descendant of Sir John Pakington, Bart., who married Hester, the inheritrix of Sir Herbert Perrot of Haroldston, in 1700.

In 1727 Richard Rawlinson, LL.D., F.R.S., St. John's College, Oxford, received from Ireland the original manuscript of "The Life, Deedes and Death of Sir John Perrot" which he published in London the following year, and which has been authenticated as having been written by an unknown author about the latter end of the reign of Queen Elizabeth.

It is from this book that the following details of Sir John's character have been extracted.

"Sir John Perrot was a man in stature very tall and big, exceeding the ordinary stature of man by much, and almost equal to the mightiest men that lived in his time. His body was very compact and proportional through all its parts. As he did exceed most men in stature so did he in strength of body. His hair was auburn until it grew grey in his elder years, his countenance full of majesty his eye marvellous piercing and carrying a commanding aspect. In time of danger he showed himself resolute and valiant He had a very sharp wit, and was (as may be said) naturally wise, for though he was not learned in the sciences yet would he give as good a reason for matters of Experiment as most men. He had in him many excellent parts, as Magnanimity, Valour, Ripeness of Judgement, Understanding of the Languages as the French, Spanish, the Italian, and in fact, matters that a man not professing Learning could comprehend; he had some defects else had he not been flesh and blood. He would swear too much which proceeding from custom and partly from choler, he could hardly refrain when provoked."

The Rev. James Phillips (1847-1907) in his "History of Pembrokeshire" gives the following vivid and striking estimate of his character:

"He was a true son of Henry VIII. If he reproduced in an exaggerated form the faults and vices which stained his father's character without the genuine refinement and culture which half concealed them from the King's contemporaries, he also inherited those qualities that enabled the masterful Tudor to retain in so large a measure, the confidence and loyal admiration of his people.

Most significant is the admission of his bitter enemy that he was "friended" as well as feared. Unclean of lip and life, unscrupulous in his greed ungovernable in his passions, cruel in his resentment, he was yet loved quite as much as he was hated.

Patriotic and loyal to the heart's core, and sincere in his attachment to the Protestant Faith, he might have taken a high place among the statesmen of Elizabeth's reign if it had not been for the violence of his temper and the foulness of his morals and his speech. The Queen entertained a high opinion of his abilities.

He had been one of the wealthiest subjects of the Crown, but the extravagance of his habits, the expensive vices in which he indulged, the number of his retainers and his princely liberality, left him little margin of income over expenditures.

Sir John had a great love for Haverfordwest and he always took a prominent part in its administration. He was Mayor three times and in 1588 was its Member of Parliament.

During his lifetime the town attained great prosperity. It contained many men of enterprise and foresight, and the Queen's Surveyor described it, "The best buylt, the most civill and quickest occupied towne in South Wales". George Owen of Henllys, Lord of Kemes, our first illustrious County Historian, stated that "Haverfordwest is a good towne, wealthie and well governed".

With its seven guilds and the many productive activities in the town many merchants built up a lucrative and foreign trade, and in this Sir John was intimately interested.

It is therefore not surprising that being so engrossed in the town's prosperity and future development he should endow the town with a princely gift the benefits from which it still happily enjoys.

Grant To Haverfordwest

As will be seen from the GRANT dated 20th September, 1580, full details of which are given below, he directed that the rents and profits derived from the messuages, lands and tenements devised therein were to be expended to the improvement of the Town of Haverfordwest, and to the repair of the Streets, bridges, walls, conduits of water, and all other dilapidations of Haverfordwest as well as to the rebuilding of the new Quay in the town and all other useful works which may be needful or suitable for the improvement of the town.

The original document which is written in Latin inscribed on parchment is in excellent condition and is now displayed on the wall in the Mayor's Parlour in the Corporation Offices, Picton Place. And interesting, is Sir John's seal attached.

In May 1899 the Deed was translated by Henry Owen esq., D.C.L. (Oxon), F.S.A*, our County's most illustrious historian, and it is as follows:-

To all the Faithful in Christ to whom this Present Deed shall come,

John Perrot of Haroldston, in the County of Pembroke, Knight, (wishes) eternal salvation in the Lord. KNOW YE that I the said John Perrot for the love which I bear towards my beloved and faithful neighbours the burgesses of the town and county of Haverfordwest and for that the mayor sheriff bailiffs and burgesses of the said town have granted for them and their successors that I and my heirs in time to come living and dwelling at Haroldston aforesaid or elsewhere in the said county of Pembroke shall have so much of every kind of wine, salt or any other merchandise coming into Milford and to the same town for common traffic or contract of sale as shall suffice for the sustenance of our house at the same price as the mayor and other burgesses of the same town shall buy and have them. And that it shall be wholly lawful for me and my heirs living and dwelling at Haroldston afore-said or elsewhere within the said county of Pembroke to have the pre-emption of all kinds of victuals coming to the Market of the town aforesaid Haverfordwest as in the said county of Pembroke in the places same town for the time being at the like price as they shall be sold to another. And that I and my heirs living and dwelling at Haroldston aforesaid shall be burgesses and of the council of the same town if we wilt. And that we shall have the nomination of one burgess in the same town in any year in which such burgess may be living and dwelling in the same town and in which he shall take such oaths as the other burgesses of the same town are wont to take.

Education

It is believed that the Chapel in the churchyard was used as a school from 1625 until a new school was built in 1872.

There is a record that there was a school in the parish in 1837 as the Tithe Apportionment meeting was held in the Schoolroom on the 20th October 1837. The building was the Chapel within the Churchyard.

The State of Education in Wales 1847. Carew Parish

National School. An old Chapel, erected in the churchyard, is the school-room. It is in Good repair, except the floor. There is a way to it without going through the churchyard. It wants more light.

The school is in great measure supported by the Vicar and the neighbouring proprietors. The scholars' pence are paid weekly in advance.

The furniture consisted of the master's desk, five desks for the scholars, 11 benches a large map of the ovoid published by Varty, and a black board. The scholars are composed of 10 farmers', and the rest labourers' children. Very correct accounts of the scholars are kept.

The school was closed for the Christmas holidays. The master, whom I saw at the School room, appeared to be an intelligent young man He writes a superior hand as did many of his scholars, judging from their copy-books.

The Rev. John Phelps, Vicar of Carew; informed me that the parish is mostly agricultural. Seven-tenths of the working-men are employed in that pursuit, and the other three-tenths in the quarries and in working barges. Labourers on their own finding get from 7s. to 8s. a-week; and 10d. a-day with food; farm-servants from £5 to £12 and female servants from 50s. to £4. The poor of the parish, or from any adjoining parish, obtain education at the rate of 1d. per week, on condition of complying with the rules of the school; viz., to learn the Church catechism and attend divine Service in the Church. The farmers in this parish arose of a superior grade, and are able to read and write well, and maintain parish affairs efficiently.

The moral character of the people here is good, being quiet and sober, excepting some of the quarrymen, who are sometimes guilty of excesses in drinking. Few others ever frequent public houses. Many adults may be ignorant, but the rising generation has the means of obtaining instruction at a low rate.

December 23rd, 1846. WM. Morris,

Mr. Kendry's School. This small school is kept in the master's dwelling-house, which is a very dilapidated state, almost falling down. The furniture for the use of the school consists only of two benches. There were in the room also a bed, a coffer, an old chest, and two or three old boxes. The master was a limestone quarryman until he met with an accident. His receipts from the school are trifling. He has 1s. a-week from the parish. He could read tolerably well.

The first scholars he had are labourers' children, seemingly of the very poor.

He does not profess to teach anything except reading. A part of the 5th chapter of Acts was read. They could answer no questions from the chapter. To general questions proposed by me they said that Christ was born in Bethlehem - was crucified by the Jews - was buried - did not know where - is now in heaven - will come again to judge the world - Carew Newton is in the county of

- one said there were six, and another that there is eight days in a week - twelve months in a year - Christmas is tomorrow.

Carew Beacon.

Sometimes called Hays or Hayes Beacon, it stands on the Ridgeway at this point the southern boundary of the parish, on a field known as Beacon field, the hedge of the field being carried up to the mound.

According to the Rev. W. G. Spurrell, rector of the parish (History of Carew 1921 p69), "its height was increased in 1813 (probably was actually 1803 because it was then that it was selected as one of the four Pembrokeshire heights that warning beacons were to be lit on in the event of a French landing) for beacon purposes." The sepulchral origin of the mound was proved by excavations carried out by Mr. James Deaden in 1851, when, at the depth of about 5 feet from the original height, and 12 feet from the beacon level, and beneath a large flagstone, an interment was met with – "The portions of bone remaining were in a very decomposed state, like small powder, and intermixed with portions of sand and stone that had fallen from the sides of the grave. We found a fragment of a ring-shaped ornament, supposed to be made of ivory, and a flint arrowhead, also a broken earthenware vessel, very crudely made, and slightly ornamented with lines... The covering of the Kist was of a species of flag not known in this neighbourhood by the oldest inhabitant. The grave or Kist was about 2 feet, and the interment was nearly due west and east" (Arch. Camb. 1852 II, ii, 291.) All knowledge of the discoveries appears to be lost.

Williamston Mounds.

On each side of RoseMary Lane is a sepulchral mound, that on the north side of the lane being the larger and better preserved of the two. It has a base circumference of 250 feet and a height of 10 feet. It is formed of earth and small stones. In 1910 it was disturbed for stone. The field on which it stands is known as Trumpet Leys (Tithe Schedule, Nos. 915, 917).

The second mound has a base circumference of about 200 feet and a height of 3 feet. It stands about 500 yards directly south of the field called Butty Park (Tithe Schedule, Nos. 890 - 1). About the year 1880, during drainage operations, "human bones and metal arrows" are said to have been found beneath a stone slab. These objects were destroyed. The mounds are not marked on the 6 in. Ord. Survey map.

Cuckoo Stones.

These are the stones of a cromlech which once stood on a field of Pincheston farm about 500 yards north-east of the house. The supporters have been forced from the upright by the growth of an ash tree. Four of them have fallen, the fifth though slanting dangerously, still sustains one end of the capstone. This stone is 6 feet by 5 feet and 2 feet in thickness; it shows a flat surface to the chamber and has a somewhat irregularly shaped top. The structure occupies a slight eminence and around it are some of the base stones of the covering cairn. It is not marked on the 6 inch Ord. Survey sheet. (Spurrell - History of Carew 1921 p70).

It forms an extensive portion of the parish, and is situated at the northern foot of the Vrenni-Vawr mountain, the second in height in the county. The Chapel is in ruins, but the incumbent of the parish receives an annual payment of a guinea from Lord Milford the impropiator. There is a small place of worship for Baptists, on the borders of this Chapelry and the parish of Llanvihangel Penbedw.

Castle-BIGH Castlebythe (Castle-BEITH), a parish, in the union of Haverfordwest, hundred of Kemmes, county of Pembroke, South Wales, 10 miles (N. N. E.) from Haverfordwest; containing 266 inhabitants. The parish occupies some high ground, near the source of a tributary of the western Cleddau river. The living is a discharged rectory, rated in the King's Books at £6, and in the patronage of the Lord Chancellor: the Church is dedicated to St. Michael. On the border of the parish are the remains of a Roman encampment, through which runs the high road separating the parishes of CastleBigh and Ambleston, and which is minutely described in the account of the latter place. There is another encampment near the Church, fortified with double ramparts, and occupying about four acres of ground. A house in the parish, called "Poll-Tax Inn," received its name from having been the place where that tax was collected.

RCAM Pembroke 1914 No 136 The Church

The Church consists of a chancel, nave and double Bell-cote above the west gable. It was practically rebuilt on the old foundations in the year 1875. Some of the steps to the rood loft remain; also a small piscina and aumbry. The font bowl is modern; the pillar may be original but it has been redressed – Visited 21 October 1914.

Pembrokeshire Church Plate Evans J T 1905

Castlebythe otherwise Castle Bigh (S. Michael). — Here in present use as a Chalice is a rare and beautiful Beaker Cup of the time of Charles I. The Hall Mark indicates the year 1630, the maker's Mark (not given in O. E. P.) being R A with fleur-de-lys beneath in a plain heraldic shield. It was probably made for secular purposes as the date of donation is 79 years later. ARound the middle of the cup is the following inscription " Communion Cup for Castle b^h parish. David Richard Churchwarden in ye yeare 1709". The cup is richly decorated with ornamental moulding, belts and scrolls, treated with great softness. This parish is to be congratulated upon possessing a piece of plate of great value and interest. There is a beaker used as a chalice at Llanfyllin, N. Wales, 1598; at Stickney, Lines., 1608, and another in Armathwaite, Cumberland, 1609. In Scotland this shaped Communion Cup was not uncommon in the 17th century.

There is also a plain electro-plated Paten of Pre-Reformation design, 5 in. in diameter together with a pewter Plate.

The State of Education in Wales 1847

The parish has a resident Clergyman, it is mainly agricultural with labourers receiving 7d a day with food and 1s a day without. Masons and carpenters 1s a day with food. The moral character of the parish is regarded as good but there are no landed proprietors resident and they do not subscribe to the maintenance of schools, only one farmer pays more than £100 per annum in rent. There is no day school in the parish but some children attend a Sunday school in the adjacent parish. There are 12 children who do not receive any schooling but most of the people of the parish can read and write. Information from John Pugh, Rector, Castle Bigh

Tumuli on Mynydd Castlebythe

The summit of Myndd Castlebythe ,1137ft above sea level, is crowned with two mounds which are probably sepulchral. They are known locally as “the Queens”. The more easterly is dome shaped and about 15ft high; base circumference about 300 ft. It presents no appearance of having been disturbed.

About 90 feet to the west is the second mound, which is of the height of 10ft and circumference of about 300ft. It was opened by the late Mr Edmund Laws, F.S.A., who found “nothing but Charcoal” (Pem Arch Survey 40) Visited 20th October 1914.

Parc Castell Earthwork

This is a semicircular earthwork situated on the farm of Wern, to the north of Castlebythe quarry. The camp is placed on a fairly sharp slope which drops precipitously to the little river Anghof. The curved rampart has a height of 6ft and a length of a little over 300ft; the chord of the arc measures 250ft. There is an exterior ditch, now well nigh obliterated. The entrance was at the eastern end of the curve; The opening had been widened by the removal of some yards of bank, The parishes of Castlebythe, Morvil, and Puncheston meet at the site –Visited 22nd October 1914

Castle Fleming (Roman?)

The greater part of this earthwork falls within the parish of Ambleston (Hundred of Dungleddy [Daugleddau]), under which it is described. In Castlebythe a neighbouring farm house is called Fleming's Castle, and directly north of the earthwork are two fields called Castle Park, while about 300 yds further northwards are two fields called Parc Castell. Finally, it may be recalled that the field to the south of the earthwork in Ambleston parish is also known as Parc Castell. These place names evidence the character and importance of the position in the estimation of those who adopted them.

Castell y bwch, the Buck's Castle

This mound stands in the centre of the village of Castlebythe, a few yards from the parish Church. The Ordinance sheet styles it a “Tumulus” and marks another monument adjoining it as “Castell y Fwch”. It is however an unmistakable mound Castle, the adjacent Castell y Fwch being the Bailey. The mound has been much disturbed, whereby its appearance has been altered. Its height varies from 10 to 20ft, and its summit diameter is about 40 ft. It was surrounded by a ditch which is much filled up The Bailey is an oval measuring 220 ft by 170ft; its encircling bank has a height of 12 ft from the bottom of the ditch. There is a strong spring just within the north bank. Lt. Col W L I Morgan R E and ex Commissioner, was informed in 1870 of “a further enclosure to the north east, slightly longer than this detached Bailey. About half of it was destroyed by the making of the railway”. This second enclosure has almost entirely disappeared – Visited 21st October 1914

Ffynnon Mihangel

This is a strong spring situated near the parish Church. The water rises in a small stone built basin which shows no trace of having had at any time a covering above it; it is a simple village well, with no tradition of curative virtues – Visited 21st October 1914.

Parc Castell

This is a field belonging to Hen ganol farm in the southern part of the parish. In its centre is a small circular mound, now almost level with the field itself whose appearance suggests a sepulchral origin. The base circumference is about 150 ft. the suggestion of a “Castle” implied in the name may be due to the near mound Castle of Castlebythe – visited 16th June 1920.

Poll Tax Inn

Fenton seems responsible for this name, which is that of “ a small house by the roadside where, it is said, the collectors of the poll tax, when it existed, used to meet (Tour 356) and which is perpetuated on the modern Ordnance maps. George Owen (Description of Pembrokeshire) mentions it as “Paltockes Inn” doubtless from a former proprietor.

Mynydd Castlebythe Ring Barrow

Remains of a ring barrow, measuring c. 16m in diameter. The bank measures c. 4.0m in width and 0.5m in height. A curvilinear area of reed growth outside the south perimeter of the earthwork suggests the presence of a ditch. The monument has spatial association with two cairns on the summit of Mynydd Castlebythe.

Castlemartin Notes

An earthwork and cluster of houses not far from the great bay of Freshwater west. The roundabout in the middle of the village was the old cattle pound, one of only two left in Britain the five roads meeting at the pound the one leading in the direction of Linney Head bay is still called Bull Street; then, as now, it led from the Castell to Bluck's Pwll, under Linney Head. The south portion of the parish is now part of the Castlemartin Tank range and is not normally accessible.

There is evidence of Middle Stone age flint "factory".

Members of the family of de Castro Martini took part in the Irish Invasion under Henry II. and Strongbow, and some remained and settled there, founding families; in later times the daughter of an Irishman, Sir Nicholas de Castlemartin, married Sir Richard Wellesley, an ancestor of the Dukes of Wellington.

The Church, down a lane to the north, has a battlemented tower, and used to have an Organ that is alleged to have once belonged Mendelssohn.

On the eastern side of the churchyard is a ruined building called "The Old Rectory".

The parish gave its name to a famous breed of cattle, the long-horned Castlemartin Blacks. In 1874 they had their own herd book but are now merged with the Welsh Blacks.

Castlemartin was an exceedingly rich and valuable corn-growing district.

Barrows

A tract of sand burrows and sand-blown shore lands leading westward to Frainslake Sands and the sea. Here from time to time traces of prehistoric man have been found. The collection which was at Brownslade House comprised flint arrowheads, some with barbs. In the Tenby Museum are two small unfinished celts and a well-formed spindle-whorl of felsite fragments of chert have also been found, neither of these stones being native. In the cabinet of fossils and shells known as the Bryant and Wright collection, brought together in Pembrokeshire and West Wales in the latter part of the 19th cent., and now in the Carmarthenshire Antiq. Society's Museums is a fine specimen of a flint chisel labelled Brownslade concerning which Mr. Reginald A. Smith, F.S.A., has reported

"A Danish Chisel of the last stage of the Neolithic period, say 2000BC and of a common type in Scandinavia, but this is the first I have heard of from Britain".

Danish flints have occasionally been found near the east coast." There would seem to be little doubt that the chisel was found at Brownslade, and is unquestionably authentic".

Brownslade Tumulus. (see under Warren)

Linney Head.

This promontory camp is called by Fenton (Tour, 410) the Head of Man but that name is not recognized to-day. It is of the usual character: a strong earthed bank, having a fine outward sweep of about 500 feet in length, is cut across a wild and storm-swept peninsula. The entrance is in the centre of the bank, the ends being strengthened by a good stone facing, which has the original construction. The exterior ditch is much silted up. A zig zag path to the sea at the extreme end of the camp is in good preservation. On the further side of the tiny inlet west of the promontory are slight traces of a bank, probably intended to protect a landing party when the cliff path was not practicable.

Bulliber or Warman's Hill Camp.

This earthwork is placed about 300 yards south-west of Bulliber farm-house.

Continuous cultivation has largely obliterated what was clear in 1880, when the earthwork was reported upon as follows:-

'Protected somewhat by a gully to the south, and gently sloping to the west, but the ground rises slightly to the east and north. The main rampart is mostly about 3 feet above the interior with a 7 feet fall. To the north-west is a terrace, 35 feet wide, Beyond this there are two further banks with a ditch between them. To the east, the most exposed-side, the defence is complicated; 62 feet in front of the first is a second rampart, the crest of which is 2 feet higher than the first, with a small intermediate bank, 150 feet long, between them, 4 feet lower than the first. And at the same distance in front is a third rampart 3 feet higher than the first, with a 9 foot terrace between it and the counter-scarp of the second ditch. Forty-two feet in front again is a fourth rampart 2 feet higher than the first, with a ditch in front. All the ditches are about the uniform level of 3 feet below the ground outside, except the main ditch, which is 5 feet. The southern side, owing to the protection of the gully, is only defended by the rampart and ditch of the inner enclosure. round the western side up to the entrance there is the inner rampart, with two others in front, with a ditch between the two last, but no outer ditch. The entrance to the enclosure has been disturbed; its present width is about 20 feet. The dry weeks in May and June, 1922, revealed traces of an approach from the north'.

Martine Castel

In the village of Castlemartin, in a field north of the meeting of five roads, is the earthwork noted by Leland as the "vestigia of Martine Castel." Though much disturbed and somewhat difficult to determine, there can be traced a circular bank, some 230 feet in diameter. It is best seen on the north, where it has a 12-feet fall to a ditch, now considerably effaced or occupied by buildings. The counterscarp of the ditch rises 4 feet to the level. The ditch is unusually wide, from 80 to 90 feet between the crest of the rampart and that of the counter-scarp to the north, decreasing to 60 feet on the west. There can be little doubt that these are the remains of a mound Castle where the mound has been completely removed, and the Bailey has almost vanished.

King's Mill Earthwork

This has been a moated homestead of somewhat irregular shape, enclosing about an acre of ground, having the moat on three sides in fair condition and still fed from an adjacent stream. The sides measure 180 and 150 feet respectively the north arm of the moat has been filled in. The surrounding rampart has an average rise of 2 feet from the interior level and falls 8 to 10 feet to a ditch. The interior area bears no trace of buildings. Adjoining the site is the farmhouse and mill known as the King's Mill.

At the court farm is a stone 18 inches by 15 inches bearing the profile of a crowned head in high relief. It probably adorned the original King's Mill.

The Old Vicarage.

On rising ground in the churchyard are the fragmentary ruins of a small domestic building known as "the old vicarage," which was inhabited up to a few years ago. When seen by Professor Freeman in 1852 it consisted of "an imperfect system of four arches; disposed on trio arcades, on one side against the wall, on the other standing free. The arches are depressed and quite plain and at once call to mind those in the churches of St. Florence and Lawhaden. The arrangement allows of only one pier, which is a column with a shaft of almost classical character, having a decided diminution; but the abacus a square one, is of enormous thickness, with small heads attached at the four corners. From the pier a screen seems to have run across to the wall (Arch. Camb, II iii, 200). The heads on the capital can still be distinguished, and are similar to that on a corbel in the walls of the Church chancel.

The Parish Church Ded. St Michael. 1922 RCAM

This interesting building consists of chancel (34 feet by 19 feet), nave (51 1/2 feet by 17 feet), north aisle (51 1/2 feet by 14 3/4 feet), south tower (14 feet by 11 feet) and south porch (13 feet by 11 feet)- It has undergone various changes at different dates. A Chapel to the north of the chancel, a second Chapel to the south, and a north transept have disappeared; while the Summit of the tower, which was originally gabled, has been altered to the flat roof with corbel table and battlements usual in the county (Arch. Camb, 1886, V, iii, 82, ill)- A west porch opening to the nave was removed in the restoration about half a century ago. The north aisle has a squint to the chancel and an arcade of c1200 with four plain single stepped arches carried on octagonal piers with shafts to the north and south. Two similar blank arches appear in the chancel, which has a blocked south lancet, and it seems that a north Chapel and transept have been removed. There was evidently once a south Chapel reached by an arch, now blocked, in the east wall of the 13c transeptal south tower. The tower top is of Tudor date and was once gabled. The vaulted porch is surmounted by a saddle-back roofed belfry. The font is Norman.

Castlemartin Church Acc to Freeman 1851 Arch Camb.

The plan comprises a nave with north aisle, chancel, a tower on the south side of the nave (forming a transept in its lower stage, and a large south porch. There has also been an aisle of Chapel on the north of the chancel and a north transept. The tower is tall and tapered but very strongly built, without string-course but with battlements and corbel table. The west parapet is slightly gabled. The belfry windows on the north, east, and west are mere slits; that on the south a double lancet with central shaft. The west end presents two almost equal gables. There are lancet windows on the south side of the nave, and altogether much that bespeaks the First Pointed period. The interior is striking and might, with careful restoration be made to have a very solemn effect. The arcade of the nave is curious, has four pointed arches with square piers chamfered, each having attached in front a shaft with rude capital. The nave and aisle are each wide and nearly equal in breadth. The tower ranges with the eastern bay of the arcade, opens to the nave by a rude arch of pointed form, and the lower part has the usual coarse vault, it has a lancet window, now filled with obituary glass. The roof of the nave is open, but very plain. There are some stone corbels in the wall over the tower arch. The arrangement of pews is awkward, though the arcade is left free. The Chancel arch is low and obuse; the chancel long, and from the unevenness of the ground has a considerable ascent towards the east. On its south side are seen two pointed arches in the wall, with a corbel at the point whence these spring, and an octagonal pillar with rude, overhanging capital, marking the former existence of an aisle. The east window, which has been restored, has three trefoil headed lancets contained under a flat arch, recently filled with stained glass representing SS. Peter, James and John. On the north-east and south-east are lancets, one closed; and on the south are three sedilia, each springing from rude corbels or capitals but without shafts. Eastward is a plain piscina, nearly triangular. The font has a circular, cup-shaped bowl, much like a cushion capital with a kind of scolloping at the upper part; the stem is cylindrical, on a square plinth. Most of the windows have, unfortunately, been transformed into sashes; but some laudable improvements have been effected, and more, perhaps will follow. The porch is extremely large, more resembling a Chapel, but is disused, and a modern door opened in the centre of the west front, whereby the arrangement is much disturbed and a wrong effect produced. The ground in the churchyard is most uneven, and on the north rises almost to the roof of the Church. There are traces of a pointed roof seen on the east wall of the tower.

In the churchyard is the base of a cross. The sacarium is large, and laid with polished tiles.

Near the east end of the churchyard is the old Vicarage, now a parish school; a curious ancient building, in which appears two arches springing from a central cylindrical column.

Pembrokeshire Parsons.

The Church of St. Michael, Castlemartin, was on 29 June, 1299, granted to John, called "Oysel," the Prior, and to the Monks of St. Nicholas, Pembroke, by Joan de Valence, countess of Pembroke, and mother of Aymerde Valence, Earl of Pembroke. - Pat. Rolls.

To the same priory William Marshall, Earl of Pembroke, granted the tithes of his mill of Pembroke, Tenby, and Castlemartin.

In 1461 the property of Pembroke Priory was granted by the King to the Abbey of St. Albans, and on the dissolution of the latter house, Castlemartin Church came into the hands of the Crown.

In 1594 the Queen was patroness. - Owen's Pem.

Cross-Incised Stone.

During the inspection of the Church a stone built into the churchyard wall bearing a cross on both front and back was noticed, apparently for the first time are very rude both in workmanship and in art. The stone was taken out of the wall and removed into the Church,

Sites of Interest

Ermigate Cross.

In the east of the parish, by the side of the road leading to Flimston Chapel and north- west of Ermigate farm-house, is the three-tier base of a cross; the field on which it stands is known as Cross Park (Tithe Schedule, No. 308). An adjacent cottage is known as Addlegutter; referring to which name and that of Ermigate the writer of Flimston Chapel (1914, p. 16) says: "The assumption is that these names may be corruptions of St. Emingitha and of St. Aethelgifa, either of whom may have made pilgrimages to Pembrokeshire."

Frainslake.

Acc/to Edward Laws.

Col Lampton in 1880 opened a tump in the sand at Freynslake. It was built of sand and stones. In it he found two skeletons in a kistvaen. From one he took the skull leaving the other as it was. This skull was given to Tenby Museum and was described by Prof. Rolleston as "the beautiful typical brachycephalic skull of a young female". With it were ox ,pig, sheep or goat bones white water worn pebbles and fragments of well baked black ware.

Longstone.

A field next west to Linney farm-house is so called (Tithe Schedule, No. 437) Nothing is now remembered of any standing stone here. It was probably used when the adjoining coastguard station was erected.

Churchways Chapel.

This little edifice stood immediately north of the Brownslade tumulus on one of two fields called Upper and Lower Church Hill (Tithe Schedule, No 376-7). The remains of foundations are now practically buried beneath the sand. When opened up in 1880 the Chapel was found to be "very tiny, being only 16 feet by 12 feet and pitched with water-worn stones".

Apostles Park.

A name still locally in use for the field next south of Pricaston farm-house. Of its origin nothing appears to be known (Tithe Schedule, No. 288).

Kings Land; East Kings Land.

Two fields south of Brownslade Farm, the names being still in local use.

Sten Bridge.

This bridge over Castlemartin Corse, doubtless meaning Stone Bridge but called. Stem Bridge on the Ordnance sheets, is situated at the point where this parish meets those of Hundleton and

Warren. This was the western limit of the Lordship of Pembroke by the grant by Henry 1 (Fenton Tour 405)

Quern.

Said (Pem. Arch. Survey) to be built into the wall covering the over-flow of the Brownslade Tank but seems to have disappeared.

Leaden tablet.

With dragonesque ornament found at Castlemartin - believed to be of Scandinavian origin (in National Museum of Wales).

Hammer Stones.

The Castlemartin floors in South Pembrokeshire have produced the two stones, One, partly bored slantwise, is, apparently, an unfinished hammer, thrown on one side because the boring had "gone wrong." The stone is of a Green granite, similar to that found at Porth-Gain in the north of the county. It measures 4 3/4 ins. by 3 1/2 ins., and is 2 ins. in thickness. It in the possession of the Rev. A. S. Jeremiah, Vicar of Castlemartin.

The other, a finished hammer-stone, of a blackish felsite, has been worked with much care and skill. It measures 4 1/4 ins. by 3 1/2 ins., and is 1 in. in thickness. The centre hole is of the hour-glass pattern. It is at present in the possession of the writer, A G. O. Mathias. Freshwater west but will eventually be deposited in the National Museum of Wales, Cardiff.

Freshwater west

A magnificent bay in the far west of the Castlemartin Peninsula. Glorious empty sands, massive sand dunes, and fascinating rocky shores to explore Mesolithic and bronze Age sites.

Traces of submerged forest 6000yrs old occasionally exposed.

Devils Quoit Dolmen about 100yds over a low fence opposite the drive entrance to Broomhill farm on the Angle Rd. About 3 ft. above the ground - enormous capstone supported one side by two uprights - otherside third upright has collapsed.

Restored seaweed collectors hut -- once used for drying the seaweed used to make laver Bread..

Frainslake Sands,

In the south, lies within the Army firing range and is out of bounds. Close to the road you can see a restored seaweed collector hut - once used for drying the special seaweed destined to become laver Bread.

Historic Houses.

Pricaston.

Inaccessible -- (on Castlemartin Tank range) -- Fine group of buildings - core a great Hall with a stone built three door passage partition at one end The earliest record on the house is in 1475 although there is records of a John and Matilda Priker holding land in Castlemartin in 1325.

Bowood.

Name and site lost. A pedigree shows descendants of John Warren of Trewern (1485 - 60) living at Bristol and at Bowood in Castlemartin, and were still at both places in 1638. Mathew Warren at the former and John Warren at the latter (could this be the farm known as Boughwood in 1660 in the parish of Monkton Castlemartin Hundred, and held then by Captain Francis Meyricke who had difficulty in paying the rent.).

Brownslade.

"About half a mile south of Castlemartin village, and westwards from the mansion we follow Frains lake (the latter being an old Pembrokeshire word meaning stream) to reach the sea coast at Frainslake Sands. The mansion was set in attractive grounds, and adjoining the grounds is Brownslade Farm, and it would seem that the farmstead was the original dwelling house" for we are informed by Malkin (1809) that "we find the newly-formed residence of Mr. Mirehouse. The ground now occupied by the house and lawn was a field twenty years ago [c.1784]. Mr. Mirehouse began in the same year with Mr. Johnes; and the present state of the Premises evinces the judgement with which his operations have been conducted" and Malkin later states that the new mansion was built about 1800. Plans and illustrations of the proposed house were made in 1783 by William Thomas architect and surveyor.

The property formed part of the estate of Lort of Stackpole Court, which passed to Alexander Campbell by marriage to the Lort heiress. The old house was a commodious building and in 1670 contained eight hearths, the occupier being John Leach. Leach died in 1675, and in 1709 Lady Campbell granted a lease of Brownslade for 21 years, to his son Abraham Leach, yeoman. The family remained until the death of John Leach soon after 1774, and his widow Elizabeth (Prout) surrendered the existing lease to John Campbell of Stackpole Court in 1789 for £3,500. It is clear that another family lived at Brownslade at the same time as that of Leach, which suggests that there may have been more houses there. This was the family of Holcombe. The will of William Holcombe of Brownslade, dated 1653, was proved in 1662: he was followed by three generations all being described as of Brownslade, and who intermarried with Meares of Eastington, Meyrick of Bush, and Corbett of Nash. The last of the family to live there was Admiral Essex Holcombe, R.N., who died in 1769-70.

Not Long after this, the Mirehouse family arrived, descended from Mirehouse of Miresdyke westmoreland.

John Mirehouse, born in 1753 had been at Cambridge University with John Campbell (later created Baron Cawdor), and became his land-agent in Pembrokeshire. In 1786 John Mirehouse, esq., was tenant of Brownslade, and it was he who built the mansion house, and later bought the freehold. He was High Sheriff in 1810. A progressive farmer and planter of trees, he converted a morass of 2674 neighbouring acres into productive land, for which he received the gold medal of the Society for Encouragement of Arts, Manufacture, and Commerce in 1800.

His estate, including Brownslade, eventually passed to R. B. Levett who had married a Mirehouse daughter, and his son R. W. B. Mirehouse, C.M.G., T.P., D.L. of The Hall of Angle took that surname in 1864. His descendents are still at the Hall.

After the Second World war Brownslade became a guest house . Later the area became part of an artillery training range and the house and farm became ruinous. The old house has been demolished.

Bulliber.

A large farm about half a mile south of Brownslade, formerly part of the Stackpole Court estate, is now within an artillery range. When John Leach of Slade, yeoman, died in 1675, his eldest son Richard Leach had a lease of Bulliber where he died in 1732 and as he had no sons, he left the lease to his wife Elizabeth. On her death the lease passed to her late Husbands nephew, Abraham

Leach who remained there until 1776. Abraham was followed by his son Nicholas Leach who died in 1811 without issue. In 1834 John Bowling held a lease of Bulliber. Thereafter it was tenanted by farmers. About 300 yards to the south-west of Bulliber are the remains of an ancient promontory fort.

Flimston (Castlemartin Parish)

According to Dr. B. G. Charles the name is found in ancient documents of the period 1324-1331 as variants of Flemisston, i.e. home of a Fleming many of whom settled in the south of the county. From 1600 onwards the form Flimston is usually found, and is thus spelt on Colbys map (1831).

Flimston Chapel

Dedicated to St Martin - on the Castlemartin Range - Vaulted Chapel - became a barn - restored in 1903 and again after WW2 - services held 2 or 3 times a year in summer.

Lambton family memorials in the Churchyard, made of ice-borne boulders collected in the neighbourhood. (Churches of Pembrokeshire - Slater).

The Chapel at Flimston was described as being devoted to farm purposes in 1800.

Archeologia Cambrensis 1880 described it: Two floors for storing corn have been inserted. In the cart shed beneath the piscina and sedilia are still to be seen in the south wall. The roof is sharply vaulted like many churches in the neighbourhood. A small turret remains on the western gable. The stair to the first floor now occupies what may have been a sacristy.

Flimston Chapel was restored in 1902 by Col. and Mrs. Lambton, in memory of their three sons who fell in the Boer War.

The building comprises a single chambered nave and chancel (46 1/2 feet by 24 1/4 feet) with a small lean-to chamber on the north side, now used as a vestry. The roof is a pointed vault having a span of 18 feet springing from the walls some 15 feet from the ground and rising to a total height of 30 feet. To the left of the north doorway is a square recess, in which has been fixed the stoup found near the ruined Chapel in Churchways. The rood corbels are still in situ. At the east end of the south call are sedilia with pointed arches, and a plain credence; a small square cupboard is now filled in, as also is a doorway opposite to the present main entrance. The font is modern.

As part of the complete restoration seven stained glass windows were installed, six in the 1903 restoration and one of the Virgin and Child by Kenneth Bunton 1964 installed in the vestry.

Of the history of this storm-beaten Chapel on Flimston Down little would seem to be recorded. A rent charge on Portfield Gate in the parish of Lambston, near Haverfordwest due to the vicar of Castlemartin, and known to have been charged for the support of the services in Flimston Chapel, is still paid. No record exists of when the services ceased prior to their resumption in recent years. In the small burial-ground attached to the Chapel have been placed several large boulder-stones from the neighbourhood, removed to save them from threatened destruction for road metalling; that at the head of Lady Victoria Lambton's grave was taken from just opposite Flimston Cottage to the south-east of the Church, others were brought from Pwllsllaughters Bulliber Farm, Lyssery (Llysevery) Farm and Merlion Pond.

Flimston Farmhouse

(On the Castlemartin Range – sheduled monument)

A farmstead near the coast, due north of Eligug Stacks.

- earliest part - was a Long, commodious dwelling, an early vaulted house, with a Hall above the under-Croft, and a tall round chimney at the main gable end. It was extended in the 1600's but is now a roofless ruin.

Flimston was a knightly residence under the Earls of Pembroke; William le. Fleming, from whom it probably derived its name, held it in 1246, Walter de Castro in 1324.

Many similar houses occur in South Pembrokeshire.

In 1786 Flemiston was owned by John Hook Campbell with Robert Jones as tenant.

Flimston Bay Camp.

This earthwork is situated on the verge of the cliffs at the boundary between Castlemartin and Warren parishes.

A natural peninsula is cut off by two stony parallel banks, each of about 300 feet in length. The entrances are placed roughly midway, and are directly in line with each other. At the extreme point are traces of a pathway down the cliff.

Linney.

Another early house that has now totally vanished except for some low walling.

Near the coast at the south-western end of the Castlemartin promontory, just south of Linney Burrows, and overlooking the inlet called Black Cove. marked as a knights fee on Rees map; as Linney house, on George Owen map, 1603 as residence of "Row esq." on the maps of Bowen (1760) and Kitchin (1763). Fenton wrote in 1811, "Nearer the sea is Linney, an old mansion, formerly the property and residence of the Rows, a family of middling fortune." It became property of the Lorts, and in 1631 the owner was George Lort of Linney, gent. In 1670 John Leach was assessed at five Hearth Tax for Linney, and his will was proved in 1675. The next was Richard Row, gent, who married Elizabeth Wearer. He was High Sheriff of the county in 1729, and died before 1735. His wife died in 1750. They had two children, Francis Row, living at Linney in 1741, who died without issue and Alice who married in 1721 James Bowen of Llwynwgwair and had issue.

The property was afterwards leased to George Phelps gent., who was there in 1787 (the owner was John Campbell) and he was followed by his only son John Phelps who inherited 10 leaseholds and was living at Linney in 1804. Thomas Jones gent., lived there in 1834.

George Roch farmer was there in 1851. James Roch in 1904.

Moor.

A farmstead south-east of the Church and marked on Colbys map. Land Tax 1786, gives Moor and Moor Hays farms, owned by John Campbell, esq. with Thomas Edwardess, tenant. Fenton writes in 1811 says "Turn to the left from Castlemartin Church, to see Moor one of the chief mansions of this district about two hundred years ago, of a very irregular form, with many ruinous and extensive outbuildings, once entered by a gateway now stopped up, leading to a porters lodge. With very few exceptions, this may serve as a model of the style of building their houses among the greatest of that era in this country, which invariably appears to have been surrounded by a high court wall having a large arched gateway, and essentially differing from the form of the principal houses of the date, in the upper part of the country; where, notwithstanding the Norman encroachment, presumptuously called a conquest, as the strongest proof of their never having been subdued, the natives retained their language and the British fashions in everything continued evidently predominant". Nearly a century later, Timmins wrote in 1895, "Moor Farm, where once stood a goodly mansion, of which scarce a stone has been spared." In the 18th century it was the home of John Prout (will proved 1780) whose daughter married John Leach of Brownsnade and had issue.

1794 Pembrokeshire Company of Gentlemen and Yeoman Cavalry

Following a meeting of the county gentry in London on 19 April 1794, the Pembrokeshire Company of Gentlemen and Yeoman Cavalry was formed. It comprised two troops, each of fifty men. The Dungledy Troop, led by Lord Milford recruited the Haverfordwest and Picton area, while men belonging to the Castlemartin Troop, led by the future Lord Cawdor, Captain John Campbell, came from the environs of Stackpole.

Shortly after Captain Campbells elevation to the peerage in 1796, the Castlemartin Troop was called upon to quell disturbances in Market towns in Pembroke area caused by Bread shortage.

Jos [EPH] Adams T0 John Campbell esq..

I thank you for your kind letter which I received yesterday and perfectly agree with you in opinion relative to the exportation of corn, the supplying the Markets and also that no language should be held to irritate a mob, but unhappily great cause was given for alarm by Roch of Paskesiton and Hervey of Angle buying up wheat to export. The report from the magistrates to the Duke of Portland's letter was that wheat is the shortest crop and that there is certainly not enough in the country for its consumption. If then the middling class are sufferers, will they not complain, and their complaints go a great way to irritate the lower orders of people who have most intercourse with them?

The farmers had withheld from supplying the Market for a fortnight to enhance the price (then too great), and notwithstanding every argument of policy and interest to them they would not be prevailed on until the people became tumultuous. Now they are justly alarmed, as are the corn factors. The farmers have promised a constant supply to the Markets and the factors will not export. So far good is come from evil. you seem to think that party jealousies were the cause, but I do assure you I never saw all ranks, parties and classes of people so irritated (farmers and factors excepted) and all coming in the same language. The heat is now, thank God, allayed, and I trust no cause will be given to revive it, for then no one can pronounce what consequences will ensue.

Your name has been glanced at as acting in contradiction to the spirit of resolutions you brought forward at the quarter sessions by letting Banjeston to Hervey. I told Mr. Mirehouse of it, and afterwards when it was reported he was concerned with Hervey I desired Mr. Hand to tell him of it that he might justify himself: enclosed is his letter to me and my answer. Since Heney has declared Mirehouse is not concerned, but you'll see by M's letter to me there was a plan which he says you were unacquainted with. I mention this as I am zealous for your honour and think I should not act right by you in not acquainting you with it

The Fencibles with Captain Ackland and the Yeomanry paraded on Saturday last and will again next Market day, so that I hope all will be quiet. But I repeat it depends on supplying the Markets and no exportation. I hope Lady Caroline and the boys were well when you heard. Miss Adams joins me in every good wish for you all.

Endorsed: Pray present my best respects to Mr. Greville when you see him.

1796 March 10 Pembroke

On my return yesterday from Earwaere I was favoured with your very kind letter and beg to assure you that I shall always be ambitious to merit your confidence and to be assisting in whatever you may have to propose. I should have written you an account of the Field Day had our meeting been such as I expected it would when I last wrote to you, but the day turned out exceeding cold and windy and, only 16 attending, we made a very short business of it and appointed another meeting that day fortnight, which will be next Tuesday, when I trust we shall do better. I shall wait your orders for our meetings, weekly or once a fortnight whichever you please. My brother's account of the conduct of the troop and his own company is highly flattering to both, and I have no doubt that they would have supported the magistrates and their officers properly. However, I sincerely hope neither the one nor the other will ever be brought to the disagreeable necessity of firing upon poor creatures who have certainly great reason to complain, for I am convinced, and so are all your friends here, that the scarcity at Pembroke is artificial and not real and that two thirds of the corn remains unthreshed, and that it is owing to the avarice of the farmers that our Markets are so high

I have the mortification to find on my return to Pembroke that Mutton is at 5d. a pound (the same as I paid in London and Bath all the Winter for the best), and here I have had some at nine months old. This is so glaring an imposition that we have come to a resolution of not buying it till the price falls Annexed you have a copy of the resolution which is signed by all the principal people here, and we mean to send it to Haverfordwest for the same purpose. In this business the farmers are alone to blame, for the price of the sheep is so high to the Butcher that he cannot get above a shilling or eighteen pence for his trouble.

In short, every order of people here are dissatisfied with the attempt to impose upon them and do not allow that the farmers here have a right to charge as much as in England, where the price of labour is double and the rent of farms much higher, and, what is remarkable, there never was known any Winter to be more grass in the country than the last. Mr. Painter has just told me that the price of sheep at Pembroke is £33 a score. I hope I have not tired you by writing so much on this subject which, as it is a serious one, I could not help giving my sentiments on it. You are so well known as the friend of the poor here that your coming to the county will be impatiently looked for. Mrs. Ackland unites in best compliments to Lady Caroline Campbell and yourself.

French Landing at Carreg Wastad Point (Fishguard)

In the following year 1797 the troop formed part of the force of 750 local men under Lord Cawdor which opposed the French landing near Fishguard. 1,400 French troops, largely untrained and unreliable, under General William Tate, an Irish-American, had landed at Carreg Wastad Point on 22 February 1797, but, fearful of an imagined British seniority, they surrendered on Goodwick Sands on the morning of 24 February .

Feb 17th 1797 a force sailed from Brest consisting of a lugger and a corvette escorted by two frigates containing several hundred released jailbirds and galley sales under the command of an American adventurer named Colonel Tate ordered by the Directory to land and "burn Bristol the second city in England for riches and commerce" and thereafter to land in Wales, March across the mountains and do the same to Chester and Liverpool. The raiders sailed into the Bristol Channel and turned tail when they saw what they thought was a warship, it was the Dublin packet boat, then went to Fishguard anchored. On Feb 22nd force landed in a rocky cove below Carregwastad Point. The vessels had been sighted, and the alarm raised. Lord Cawdor mustered the Castlemartin Yeomanry, Cardigan Militia and Fishguard Volunteers (Local militia units) and they marched seaward from the village of Llanwnda followed it is said by the women of the area wearing their red cloaks..although the french outnumbered the militia 3 to 1 on seeing the advancing militia Colonel Tate ordered his men to stand firm then went forward and surrendered himself and his army to Lord Cawdor unconditionally "upon principles of humanity". The main problem of the volunteers was preventing the enraged Welsh villagers from cutting the throats of the french prisoners as they were marched off to jail

Acc/to Journal 1885 Vol XLI of the Congress of British Archeological Society

25 of the French captured after the invasion at Fishguard chatted up some girls in Pembroke and enlisted their aid in escaping, they stole Lord Cawdor's Yacht and sailed to France

Acc to Roger Worsley

Two local girls Eleaner Martin and Ann Beach fell for some of the French and helped them escape. The French dug a tunnel and the girls took away the spoil in yoked tubs pretending it to be sewage. The tunnel was over 60yds Long. They all then got away by stealing the yacht belonging to Lord Cawder

Fifty six years later Queen Victoria awarded the battle honour "Fishguard" to the Yeomanry, and it remains the only one given to a British Army unit for opposition to an enemy force within the British Isles. The Pembroke Yeomanry also has battle honours for: "South Africa, 1901" "Egypt, 1916/17", "Gaza", "Jerusalem, "Jericho", Tel Asur", "Palestine, 1917-18", Somme, 1918", Bapaume 1918", "Hindenburg Line", "Epehy", "Pursuit to Mons" and "France and Flanders, 1918".

The average wage for an outdoor labourer was 5d a day in Winter and 7 1/2d a day in summer. During the early part of the century labourers received a cottage and potato plot at a low rent and their fuel completely free, but by the end of the century these benefits had almost disappeared.

A Topographical Dictionary of Wales S Lewis.

The rocks on this part of the coast consist of an irregular series of broken stratifications apparently thrown together by some violent convulsion and presenting an uncommon grandeur of appearance. From March to Augusts these rocks are the resort of that migratory Bird called the elug, which during that period deposits its solitary egg on the shelving projections of the cliffs, and, supporting it with its foot, which possesses a degree of warmth sufficient for the purpose of incubation, after having hatched its young and enabled it to shift for itself, leaves the vacant place to be occupied by another of the swarm that covers the surface of the water, waiting for an opportunity to perform the same process. This Bird cannot take wing from land: as soon, therefore as the young is able to fly, the parent Bird throws it into the water, from which it rises with remarkable strength of wing over that element.

This parish is totally enclosed, and the land is mostly fertile and in a good state of cultivation: the Cors, a tract of land comprising about three hundred acres, was brought into cultivation by the late Mr. Mirehouse, of Brownslade, to whom, in 1810, the Society for the Encouragement of Arts, Manufactures, and Commerce adjudged their gold medal for clearing waste Moors. The same gentleman also surrounded his house at Brownslade with luxuriant plantations, which, from their exposure to the violence of the south-west winds, it was generally apprehended would wither in the shoot; but, under the judicious management of that eminent agriculturist, the trees have flourished in opposition to every impediment, and, though much neglected of late by the unavoidable absence of the present proprietor, who is one of the special pleaders to the city of London, during the greater part of the year, are highly ornamental to the neighbourhood.

Besides Brownslade, the seat of John Mirehouse, esq., Corston, the respectable residence of Abraham Leach, esq., is in this parish.

The whole of the district abounds with numerous military works and fortifications, thrown up during the frequent contests which took place between the Danish pirates who infested this part of the coast, which, from its exposed and defenceless situation, was much subject to their attack and the native Welsh, who resolutely repelled their aggression: one of these may be seen on a farm in this parish, called Bully Bar.

The parish abounds with limestone of excellent quality, in the centre of which is found clay much used in the manufacture of fire bricks. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of St Davids, rated in the King's Books at £7 17s 6d. endowed with £400 royal bounty, and in the patronage of Earl Cawdor, who is also impropriator of the tithes. The Church, dedicated to St. Michael, is an ancient structure, and has undergone thorough repair within the last ten years. There was anciently a Chapel at Flimston, which has Long since gone to decay. A plot of ground, on which some cottages inhabited by the poor of the parish, was given by an unknown benefactor but there are no particulars of the donation on record. The Castle of the family of Martill, descendants of Martin de Tours, and from which the parish and the hundred are supposed to derive their name, was in a state of ruin prior to the time of Leland, who says, "Towarde this extrem part of Pembrokeshire be the vestige of Martin Castle".

The average annual expenditure for the support of the poor is £350.15

Parish Of Castlemartin.

I visited this Parish on the 18th of December. The children generally attend the Earl of Cawdors school in the parish of Warren, which is not far off. There is however a small dame-school held in part of an old building (occupied by a labourer and his wife) in the churchyard. The school has been furnished with cards and Prints by the Vicar and Mrs. Mirehouse of Brownslade. I found the room clean and comfortable, and the mistress a respectable person of her class. There were only two little children present owing to the extreme severity of the weather and the deep snow.

Population.

1536 Number of Households 65

1670 Number of Hearth Tax Payers 70

1801 Number of families 61 - This suggests that there had been a depopulation in the area.

Campbell John 19 April 1794 Captain commanded Castlemartin Troop the Pembrokeshire Company of Gentlemen and Yeoman Cavalry de Castro Martini Sir John , he was a witness to de Cantinton Willams charter of St. Dogmael, and afterwards to Fitz Martin Nicholas confirmation thereof, also as seneschal of Pembroke to Mortimers Roger charter to de la Roche .Thomas , This office had been held by his father, another de Castro Martini John 1244 joined with the other notables in the letter to John of Monmouth as to the attack on Cardigan, and who, as Sheriff of Pembroke, was a witness Marshall Earl Walter charter to Monkton Priory. In 1324 another de Castro Martini John held of the Earl on the death of de Valence Aymer, at Mineyerdowen (Minerton), Blancultoyt (Blaencilgoed), and Hethhavelok or Kethhavelok (Gellyheulog ?) . There are few further traces of the family, Castlemartin John 1405 was appointed, with Perrot Stephen of Haroldston, to receive the black mail for Owen Glyndwr.

Fenton" says that Castlemartin Castle (where Leland found the "vestigia of Martine Castel") was the baronial residence of the lords of Castlemartin. But the manor of Castlemartin was always part of the demesne of the Earl, and the most valuable part thereof. On the death of Aymer de Valence the value of the whole lordship was £175 16s. 4d and of this sum Castlemartin manor was worth £102 0s. 2d No doubt Castlemartin Castle was held by the Earls themselves. It is probable that this was the reason why Castlemartin gave its name to the hundred. But of the Martin who gave his name to the Castle there is no trace, and for the statement that he was descended from Martin, the conqueror of Kemes, there is no evidence.

Loveling Mathias (Mathew) 1629 who also held the living of Warren as did many of the succeeding vicars Mathias although had problems because be was turned out of the benefice for insufficiency by the Commissioners for Propagation in 1650 and the profit's they were sequestered a successor was not appointed He seems to have regained the living in 1662 when many puritain ministers left their livings rather that give assent to the rites and rituals of the Church under the Act of Uniformity The Land Tax Records give us a picture of the size of the parish at that time of thirty households ten were classed as paupers and only six had more than one hearth the biggest house in the area has occupied by Thomas , Gough and had five hearths. not very big when compared to some of the houses in other parishes. Mathias Loveling 1671 died in 1671 and was succeeded by his son

Loveling William 1718 during his time Erasmus Saunders described the living of Warren as one of the poorest in the area and says of the churches generally in the area that there were many which "" we are but rarely if at all to meet with Preaching Catechising or Administering of the Holy Communion In others the Services of the prayers is but partly read, and that perhaps but once a month or perhaps once in a quarter of a year Curates were submitted to serve three of four churches very often ten of twelve miles from one another for an annual stipend of £10. William was in 1718 followed by his son

Loveling Thomas 1760 Thomas , died in 1760 but his wife lived to be 104 according to Fenton she was mother to Loveling of Trinity College Oxford who published a book of poems, "elegant specimens of classical latinity, but more honourable to his muse than his morals" [unfortunately I have not been able to obtain a copy so I cannot comment].

Cilgerran, (Kilgerran)

Cilgerran is a small town in Pembrokeshire, on the River Teifi and near the site of Cilgerran Castle, built in 1100. The Castle is thought to have been captured by Owen Glyndwr in 1405. It is probably one of the most picturesque castles in Wales and has been painted by many artists including Joseph Mallord William Turner.

The town is first mentioned in 1204 from when it was the administrative centre for a lordship until the 16th century. Although the town remained small it was considered one of the main Market centres in Pembrokeshire in the 17th century. The churchyard of St Llawddog contains a megalithic standing stone or Ogham stone upon which Ogham writing can still be seen. Annual coracle races, started in 1950, attract competitors from all over the world. RCAHMW, 2009.

Fenton Tour 1810

All of a sudden the ruined pride of Cilgerran Castle rises gradually to view over a fine foreground of two projecting capes, well wooded, doubling each other till at last it opens to one of the grandest scenes I ever beheld. Numberless petty circumstances all contributory to the general effect of the view, such as cottages, lime kilns, corricles and other inferior ingredients are everywhere happily scattered, but are lost or overlooked in the contemplation of the principal object, the Castle.

The castle occupies one of those projecting points, which the Hill on that side is broken into (and here almost insulated) by deep gullies, fretted by mountain torrents forcing their way to the Teivy, and consists of several bastions of different forms, and different degrees of preservation, connected by curtains of various lengths and directions, accommodated to the shape of the foundation rock it rests upon, which is of the slaty kind, of very considerable height, and rising almost perpendicularly from the bed of the river.

Quitting the barge we ascended by a winding path up the Hill on the west side of the ruins, till we arrived at the entrance fronting the village of Cilgerran. It had another ward flanked with bastions, whose foundation line may be now clearly traced, though the superstructure has been removed. The inner ward is of great extent, and involving the keep and all the state apartments, and is much more uniform and entire than from the dilapidated state of the external you have reason to expect. The surrounding avenues leading from the village to the Castle, are to this day called Pumporth, the five gates, there having been so many entrances, besides a sally port opening to the steep Hill on the east side of the cape it occupies.

The village of Cilgerran is a straggling place of great length, at least half a mile from the Church, at the western extremity, to that in the east; and the tradition is, that formerly the Church stood in the centre of the town. It is enumerated among the ancient boroughs of the county, and still boasts some sort of government; but I doubt much if either sanctioned by any existing charter of fair proof of prescription. However, it has annually the mock parade of choosing a portreeve and making burgesses, who lay claim to some right of common, which there is reason to think they have been of late in the habits of exercising with a latitude, that the authority they claim under, if investigated, will not justify; a set of marauding vagabonds, levellers, enemies to privileged property and the Laws which protect it, who live by scrambling, and having nothing to lose, profit by confusion, and would rejoice to see the whole country once more in a state of anarchy and reduced to a forest, a desert.

I visited the Church, that seen from the bottom of the little woody dingle, at the head of which it stands, forms a very interesting subject for the pencil; but there is nothing in the structure within or without worthy of particular observation, if you except a beautiful fragment of rood loft yet remaining, of the same character, and most probably of the same age, with that most perfect and elegant specimen of the kind, in the little Church of Partrishaw in Brecknockshire.

The origin of the Castle has never been precisely fixed, some ascribing it to Roger de Montgomery, and others to Gilbert, Earl of Clare, whereas most probably Montgomery might have begun the fortifications on this spot, while Strongbow finished into a more perfect garrison. But be that as it may, we find it frequently besieged and destroyed, and as often repaired. In 1164 it was taken from the English by Rhys, Prince of South Wales, who added to its strength; but the following year it was attacked by the united force of the Normans and Flemings, who, after two victorious assaults were repulsed with great slaughter. This politic and warlike Prince was too well aware of its importance not to take every step necessary to render it still more impregnable, as we hear nothing more of it till 1199, when, in the wars between Maelgwn and his brother Grufydd, then Prince of South Wales, it was taken by Maelgwn, and its fortifications still strengthened, though it was afterwards wrested from him by William Marshall Earl of Pembroke, about the end of the year 1204, in whose possession it continued with the whole Lord-ship annexed to it till 1215 when Llewhellin besieged it, and it surrendered without making any show of defence; who, the year after, in his distribution of South Wales among the descendants of Lord Rhys, then at variance with each other, allotted this Castle with other portions of Dyved to Maelgwn, who did not long enjoy it; as in 1122, William Marshal, on his return from Ireland with a great army, recovered possession of all the castles that Llewhellin had won, and after the defeat of Grufydd, Prince Llewhellin's son, on the banks of the Towy, marched to Cilgarren, which he resolved to put into the most formidable state of defence, and began to build a new Castle; but on sudden summons from the King to attend him at London left his army to complete the great work. This, then, may probably be the era of the present building, though, perhaps, incorporated with some fragments of the former. By the death of Maelgwn and his brother Rhys Gryg, the spirit of the Welsh was fairly extinguished, and we never hear more of an attempt to recover this Castle, which continued unmolested in the possession of the brothers of William Marshall, successive Earls of Pembroke, till after the death of Anselm, the last of the male line without issue. On the partition that took place then of the possessions of the earldom between the descendants of William Marshall's sisters, this Castle with the Lord-ship was severed from the earldom; but of its history from that period we know little till we find it in the time of Henry the seventh possessed by the Crown; and William Vaughan, a strenuous adherent of the Monarch, constable of it, whose grandson Rhys Vaughan, styled of Cilgerran laid the foundation of a respectable house in the vicinity, Glanddyvan, and married a daughter of Thomas Phaer, doctor of physic.

1895 Nooks and Corners Of Pembrokeshire Timmins

The next morning sees us early under way, and well on the road to Kilgerran, ere the sun has climbed high enough to make matters unpleasantly warm for the wayfarer. Beyond Nevern we pass near the lonely deserted Chapel of Bayvil, and, after a Long spell of steady collarwork, get some fine vistas of varied landscape near the old grass-grown barrows called Crugau Kemaes.

At the crossways farther on we are a matter of 500 feet above the sea, with Monington village on our left, and the Church and ruined Castle of Llantood away to the right. Then, as we near Kilgerran, we notice an old boundary-stone under the hedgerow, bearing a few half-obliterated lines anathematizing him who should venture to remove this landmark, the original purpose of which has probably Long since been forgotten.

Passing under a railway arch, we soon descry Kilgerran Church, standing on the brink of a narrow ravine that opens towards the Teivy. St. Llawddog, from whom this Church inherits its euphonious patronymic, appears to have been a saint of some local celebrity, for his name crops up at more than one place in the immediate neighbourhood.

With the exception of its gray old tower, Kilgerran Church has been entirely rebuilt, and calls for no particular notice. In the graveyard stands a venerable monolith, much older than the Church itself.

The weathered surface of the stone is scored with those Ogham characters, so fascinating to the antiquarian mind; these hieroglyphics have been deciphered as follows : “trengussi fili hic iacit.” Unfortunately, a large portion of the monolith is sunk below the level of the ground, thus rendering a thorough examination of its surface impracticable.

To eyes fresh from the beauties of Nevern, the long, rambling street of Kilgerran offers anything but an inviting appearance, being flanked by meagre unkempt dwellings, with but one or two cottages more antique mould in the older portion of the village.

Despite the humble, not to say squalid, aspect of the place, there was a time when Kilgerran held a position of no small consequence. A borough town, governed by portreeve, aldermen and burgesses, its 'court-leet' and 'view of frankpledge' held their annual meetings at Kilgerran; while many another time-honoured privilege bore witness to a state of things that has long since passed away.

In those piping times, it was customary for each newly-elected burgess to prove his fitness for office by draining at one draught a Horn of strong Welsh ale; the Corporation Horn used on such occasions holding full a pint and a half of liquor!

We now make our way to the Castle ruins, which occupy the brow of a lofty cliff overhanging the deep gorge of the Teivy. The existing remains of Kilgerran Castle consist of two massive round towers, separating the outer from the inner Bailey, with considerable fragments of the gatehouse.

The entire fabric is plain, and very massively constructed, showing little or no trace of ornamentation; the few doorways and windows that remain being arched in a primitive fashion, without the use of the customary keystone. A rough stone wall encircles the precipitous scarp next the river, a portion of which fell down suddenly many years ago, having been undermined by the excavations of the quarry- men.

Kilgerran Castle appears to have been founded at a very remote period, though the existing structure is probably not older than the beginning of the thirteenth century. In Powell's 'History of Cambria,' we Read how, Henry I. having granted to Strongbow the lands of Adwgan ap Blethyn, the great Earl ' builded a faire castel at a place callyd Dyngeraint, where Roger Montgomerie had begonne a castel before tyme.' Its subsequent history is unimportant, and Kilgerran Castle has at last succumbed to the shocks of time and the more devastating hand of man, who appears to have regarded its ancient walls in the light of a convenient quarry.

A largish village (once a town) in Pembrokeshire situated on the Teify with a station on the Whitland Cardigan line. The chief industry is quarrying. The place possesses the remains of a Castle built on jutting rock overhanging the river which here flows between high banks most beautifully wooded. The Norman who first fortified the site was Hugh de Montgomery but the builder of the existing fabric was William Marshall. It owes its present ruinous condition to Cromwell and the time. It is said to have consisted of an outer and inner Bailey, and to have had five gates The remains include little more than two round towers , the walls are of immense thickness and very rude construction . The Castle forms the object of a picture by Turner. In the Churchyard south of the Church is a bilingual Ogham Stone The Latin inscription has been Read TRENEAGUSSI FILI MACUTRENI HIC IACIT

It is high above the tidal limit of the River Teifi, a natural river crossing but accessible to ships. There was a Market held here the first record dates from 1300

During the reign of Henry 1 (1100 - 1135) two new Marcher Lordships were established Cemaes and Cilgarran Gerald de Windsor held Cilgarren but the area was recaptured by the Welsh Castle was probably built built in 1223 after the Normans recaptured the area by the son of William Marshall of Pembroke.

Castle built on a rising crag where Teifi is joined by Afon Plysgog at the highest tidal limit for supplies to be brought by sea. site was an iron age promontary fort.

Once regarded as a borough although no charter is known. Parish Church St Llawddog - may be the centre of an early Welsh settlement --

Kilgerran (CÎL-GARON), a parish, and formerly an incorporated Market-town, in the union of Cardigan, hundred of Kilgerran, county of Pembroke, South Wales, $2\frac{1}{4}$ miles (S. S. E.) from Cardigan; containing 1149 inhabitants. This place owes its origin to the erection of a Castle, of great strength and extent, the original foundation of which is involved in much obscurity: some writers attribute it to Roger de Montgomery, and others to Gilbert, Earl of Clare. In 1164, this important fortress was taken from the English by Rhys ab Gruffydd, Prince of South Wales, by whom it was considerably strengthened; and in the following year the Normans and Flemings made an unsuccessful attack upon it. During the civil war between Rhys's two sons, Gruffydd and Rhys, the former of whom had succeeded to his father's dominions, it was captured in 1199 by Gruffydd, from whom, however, it was wrested by William Marshall, Earl of Pembroke, about the year 1204. Llewelyn ab Iorwerth, in 1215, included the capture of this Castle among his numerous conquests in this part of the principality, but ceded it, in the following year, to a native chieftain named Maelgwyn, from whom it was retaken in 1222, by the Earl of Pembroke. This nobleman immediately commenced the erection of a new fortress, which was finished by the garrison, during the earl's absence in London, whither he had been summoned to attend the King. The Castle thenceforward continued annexed to the earldom of Pembroke, until the decease of the youngest son of Earl William, when the vast estates of the family descended to co-heiresses, and the Castle and lordship of Kilgerran were separated from the earldom. The importance of the Castle imparted a proportionate degree of consequence to the town, which was endowed with corporate privileges, and continued to flourish until the decay of the former, on which it underwent a like decline.

It is now only a small village, consisting of one street, about half a mile in length, the houses in which are mean, straggling, and irregularly built, with the Church at the western extremity. The river Teivy, which runs on the east and north to its estuary below Cardigan, here winds in majestic reaches along the Valle to which it gives name, and which at every bend presents some fresh features of novel and picturesque beauty. In sailing up the Teivy, in one part of its course, the hanging woods that clothe the sides of the environing hills recede from the margin of the stream, and leave room for a narrow strip of meadow land, whilst the varied scenery on the opposite bank is terminated by the August ruins of the Castle, on the summit of a projecting rock rising precipitously from the brink of the river. Upon the Cardiganshire side of the Teivy, the noble woods which give name to the valuable estate and mansion of Coedmore, cover the sides and summit of the rock, partially disclosing at intervals impending masses, which contrast finely with the sylvan beauties of the scene. Pursuing the course of the river, rich groves, alternating with the naked rock, continue to excite the admiration of the traveller, till he arrives within a short distance of Llêchrhyd bridge, where the Valle expands on either side, margined by luxuriant meadows, from which the hills recede, beautifully varied with churches, seats, and cottages, embosomed in the foliage of successive plantations. In the parish are three mansions, namely, Glândovan, the seat of Robert Frederick Gower, esq., of which family was Admiral Sir Erasmus Gower, who accompanied Earl Macartney in his embassy to China, and greatly distinguished himself in the naval service of his country; Castell Maelgwyn, the property and residence of Abel Lewis Gower, esq.; and Rhôs-y Gilwen, the elegant modern mansion of John Humphreys, esq., who obtained this estate by marriage with Catherine, daughter of the late Thomas Colby, esq., of Fynnonau, and erected the present house.

There are extensive slate-quarries in the parish, which are actively worked, and enjoy a facility of communication with the sea by means of the Teivy, which is navigable as high as Llêchrhyd bridge, about three miles above Cardigan. The Market, held on Wednesday, has fallen into disuse; but fairs take place annually on August 21st and November 12th, for the sale of cattle, horses, pigs, &c. The place has long since lost many of its municipal privileges, but still retains a semblance of its former importance in the appointment of a portreeve, who receives the tolls taken at the fairs, a town-clerk, two bailiffs, and an indefinite number of burgesses. Two courts are summoned every year by the bailiffs under warrants from the portreeve, the one soon after Michaelmas-day, and the other at Easter, upon days fixed by the portreeve for the time being; and at the first-named of these courts, the jury, who are burgesses, present one of the burgesses to fill the office of portreeve after remaining three years on the list. The town-clerk and bailiffs are chosen by the portreeve; and the freedom is acquired by presentment of the jury at one of the courts leet, when persons are admitted, who, after the expiration of a year, become entitled to the privileges of burgesses. These privileges consist of exemption from toll, and the use, under certain regulations, of a large tract of unenclosed grazing land, containing from 60 to 100 acres, and some stone and slate quarries.

The living is a discharged rectory, rated in the King's Books at £9, and in the patronage of the Lord Chancellor: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £190, and there is a glebe of nine acres, valued at £9. 10. per annum; also a glebe-house. The Church, dedicated to St. Llawddog, was an ancient structure, in the early style of English architecture, with a square tower at the western end, but the body of the edifice was some years ago taken down and rebuilt, with the aid of a grant of £100 from the Church-Building Commissioners, and £60 from the late Abel Anthony Gower, esq.: it is now in a very respectable condition. In the churchyard is a rude stone, bearing an inscription now illegible, but evidently a monumental stone. There are places of worship for Baptists, Independents, and Calvinistic Methodists. A National school-house, with a master's house attached, was built in 1845, at a cost of upwards of £500, defrayed by local subscription, and grants of £100 from the National Society, and £90 from the Committee of Council on Education. Four Sunday schools are also held, one of them in connexion with the Established Church. The ruins of the Castle rank among the most striking, extensive, and picturesque remains of ancient fortresses in South Wales. They stand on the edge of a rock rising perpendicularly from the southern bank of the Teivy, and consist of several bastions of different forms, with portions of the curtain wall: the Castle had two wards, the plan of which, with the position of the integral parts, may be clearly traced. It is at present, together with that of Pembroke, held by grant from the crown (made in the reign of James II.), by Pryse Pryse, esq., of Gogerddan, in the county of Cardigan.

Churches of Pembrokeshire – Glynne 1855 Cilgerran - St Llawddog

1855 June 23rd

This Church has lately been restored and in great measure rebuilt, in a most creditable style unusual in the Principality. The walls seem to be entirely new except the tower. The plan consists of nave with south aisle, chancel and western tower. The tower slightly tapers, and is of plain character, with small openings, a single cinque foiled belfry window and no buttresses, a plain plain battlement. A west door has been added of greater pretension, of Early English character, with toothed mouldings and shafts; no west window. The arcade of the nave has three good pointed arches, with octagonal pillars, having capitals well formed of slate. The chancel arch is plainer and without impost; the roof all open and the seats uniform, low and open and no gallery. The windows Decorative of two lights, except those at the east end, which are of three and filled with Fair new stained glass in commemoration of two persons deceased. The east window of the south aisle is the best as to stained glass, in memory ---- Collis and his sister Elizabeth Bearcroft. The chancel is stalled, and laid with encaustic tiles, the sacrarium more rich; the rails of iron, blue and gold. There are good crosses on the gables of the east end. The font is an imitation of that of St Mary Magdalene. Oxford.

Royal Commission of Ancient Monuments Parish Church of St Lawddog

The present building, with the exception of the tower is modern, having been erected in 1855, in the place of one which dates only from 1839

The latter for reasons of safety had to be levelled to the ground (History Cilgerran p58)

The western tower 17ft square is of three storeys, with corbel table and renewed battlements; it is a good example of the Pembrokeshire tower of 13th century. The western door has been modernised (visited 7th July 1915.)

CADW Church of St Llawddog

The Church of St Llawddog is a grade II* listed building. The Church's tower is mediaeval and the remainder, in decorated Gothic style, dates from 1855. The font and pulpit are carved Bath stone.

The State of Education in Wales 1847 Parish of Kilgerran

This parish were it not for the assistance of the neighbouring proprietor, who grants £35 per annum must be without a school. The people are very poor. The overseer stated that he hardly knew on whom to levy the poor rates, there were so many who might plead exemption on the score of poverty.

The main occupations are Fishing, Slate quarries and agriculture. Fishing is an uncertain and demoralising trade. Slate quarries 8s a week and labourers 6s to 7s per week on their own finding.

National School

The schoolhouse in which the school is kept, together with the master's house attached, built by local subscriptions, with grants of £100 from the National Society, and £90 from the committee of Council on Education, cost upward of £500. There is a large garden at the back of the premises, but the whole is not enclosed. Some trees are also planted in front, which, in time to come will have a good appearance. The premises altogether are well adapted for the purpose of a school house. The room contained one master's desk, 4 desks for the scholars. 19 benches and maps of the World, Europe, Canaan, Scotland, Ireland and England and Wales. All on rollers but not varnished. The school is supported by subscription of the neighbouring gentry. The master who is engaged temporarily is a young man. He spoke English correctly. The mistress (not the master's wife) spoke but little during my stay in the school. She teaches sewing to the girls under her care. The scholars are mostly labourer's children. Those who are able, pay 3s a quarter for being taught reading and writing, 4s including arithmetic and 5s including geography and English grammar. The poorer scholars have their instruction gratis. The 4th chapter of St John's Gospel was Read, and the scholars were able to answer questions proposed to them by the Rector from that chapter correctly

Questions on Arithmetic were answered correctly as were those of English Grammar but in Geography with difficulty.

Some of the copy books were tolerably well written

There is no salary guaranteed to the mistress, but Mrs Gower of Castle Malgwy, Mrs Gower of Glandyfan and Mrs Colby of Rhos y gerwyn pay occasionally for the schooling of some poor children. The girls are taught sewing as well as reading, writing and arithmetic. A part of the 2nd Chapter of St Matthews Gospel was Read and the scholars could answer questions from the chapter tolerably well. In arithmetic adding and subtraction were calculated correctly.

The copy books were kept clean 1st February 1847

2013 Cilgerran County Primary School educates 139 (in 2013) children from nursery to 11 years old and serves several surrounding villages. Pupils are taught in English and Welsh with the aim of bilingualism by the age of 11.

Cilgerran Castle RCAM 1923

This Castle is usually stated to have been built by William Marshal the younger, who was in possession in 1223, but it dates from about half a century later. The Marshal family held Cilgerran until the death of George de Cantilupe (son of the younger William's sister Eva) in 1272, when it lapsed to the Crown, who appointed as custodian successively, Henry de Bray, Nicholas son of Martin of Kemes and William Valence. It next reverted to John de Hastings, whose mother was George de Cantilupe's sister. In 1387 Cilgerran appears on the list of castles damaged or destroyed while in the custody of William de Beauchamp, Lord of Pembroke. Soon after it may have been dismantled, for we do not hear of its siege by Owain Glyndwr, nor is it known to have played a part in later troubles.

The Castle stands on a rocky eminence above the river Teifi. Mr G T Clark has given us an excellent description of this fortress, from which we make the following extract. It is, he observes, Technically an Edwardian Castle, but like others, of rather earlier date than Edward I. It is of peculiar interest, because it does not exhibit the usual Edwardian symmetry of the plan, but has been adapted by the engineer to the character of the ground. The north eastern and north western sides being protected by the river cliffs, the engineer had only turned his attention to the remaining sides. On the west side of the inner Bailey, abutting on the cliff is the gate house, a plain rectangular building, the northern half of which, including most of the gatehouse, has been removed, though a rude portcullis groove and a portion of the chamber above remain. The gatehouse was connected by a short wall to the South west tower, a very fine cylindrical shell, containing four floors not vaulted, and a battlement platform. I was entered from the court by a plain doorway, on the right which was a well staircase leading to each floor, the curtain and gatehouse, and to the battlements of the tower itself. One of the windows was divided into two lights by a rude pier, either an afterthought of the builder or of a much later date. From this tower a curtain of great height and thickness passed on to the South East tower. At its junction with this tower there was a postern and above it at some height a relieving arch, and indication that this part of the wall belonged rather to the South East than the south west tower.. The south east tower, which is not unlike its sister, had also a door towards the court, and a well staircase, though on the left hand, ascending to the summit and curtain beyond. There were, however no fireplaces as in the south west tower and the windows to the court are in pairs, and may also be pure Norman from their character. The Ashlar work of both towers, if there had been any, is nearly all removed. Although part of the original plan, the South east tower appears to be of earlier execution than its companion. From this tower the curtain continued until it terminated in a sort of polygonal head upon the river cliff, where a breastwork commenced. The breastwork ran along the river front as far as the North Angle, which was occupied by a rectangular building of superior masonry to the rest, and which probably contained dwellings or guard rooms. From this building, which commanded the view up the two ravines, the breastwork was continued along the edge of the cliff until it met with the gatehouse and thus completed the circuit of the inner defences. The outer Bailey covered the two landward faces, extending from cliff to cliff, being traversed by a causeway leading from the gatehouse leading from the gatehouse towards the village , and which ran along the edge of the north west cliff from which it was protected by a slight parapet. The Bailey also included a dry moat from which the two drum towers rose, and a sort of platform of green sward, outside of which was evidently an outer line of wall. South eastwards this Bailey was terminated by the southward to unite with the outer work. This portion also contained a postern or water gate, so arranged that persons issuing from the inner work could gain and exit to a zig-zag leading under the river front to the water's edge . The masonry generally is not unlike the worst parts of Caerphilly being of rude character, and with little ashlar even about the loops and windows. In fact quality seems to have been replaced by quantity, the walls being of enormous thickness. The drum towers do not as frequently elsewhere in Wales rise from square bases, but like those of Caerphilly are cylindrical from top to bottom. The battlements are but slightly projected and the rest on shallow corbels. In some cases they have no projection at all. No trace of Chapel, or distinct state apartments, or even a well can be made out (Arch Camb 1859 III,v, 340)

In June 1863, a portion of the breastworks fronting the river, 56 ft in length and 20ft high, fell the result of quarrying for stone. The ruins are in a very neglected condition – Visited 7th July 1915.

Cilgerran Castle Edwards, Emily Hewlett Castles and strongholds of Pembrokeshire Tenby 1909

Cilgerran is generally considered to possess a finer situation than any other Castle in South Wales, standing as it does on a triangular promontory, two of whose sides are protected by precipitous cliffs overlooking the River Teivi. The stronghold once consisted of a magnificent mass of masonry occupying a considerable area, having an inner and outer Bailey, five gates, a portcullised gatehouse, and strong cylindrical towers. The shells of two of these towers are still standing, in one of which are fireplaces, a fine spiral staircase, and a round-headed window, divided by a pier, apparently in the manner of a Saxon "balustered" light. Mr. Clark . terms this fortress " technically an Edwardan Castle," but irregular because the plan has been adapted to the site on which it stood. The masonry is rough, and composed of small, thin, slate-like stones, many of which are placed closely together in spreading gradation to form rude archways, which can scarcely be said to have a keystone. The walls are of enormous thickness, in some places measuring 12 feet. This method of building with slate-stones makes the date of construction very hard to judge.

Before Arnulph de Montgomery founded Pembroke Castle, his father, Roger de Belesme had obtained the Royal permission to win lands in Wales, and advancing through Powis and Cardigan, he appropriated both these lordships, and began to build a fortress at Cilgerran somewhere about the year 1092.

During the first decade of the next century Gilbert de Clare, on his conquering tour through the maritime provinces of South Wales, is said to have built a Castle "towards Dyvet upon the River Teivi at a place called Dyngeraint (Cilgerran), where Roger Mountgomery had begonne a Castle before time."

In 1165 the Lord Rhys led his Welsh forces against the Castle, and is said to have razed it to the ground, but next year the fortress, now held by the Welsh, was strong enough to twice repel a considerable body of Normans and Flemings.

In 1172 the Lord Rhys entertained King Henry II. on his way to Ireland. A story is told that while Henry was staying at Cilgerran a Welsh bard revealed to him that the bodies of the famous Arthur and his Queen Gwinever lay at Glastonbury. The King, on his return, instituted a search, and tradition says a coffin was found containing human bones of great size, with the following inscription on the lid :

" Hie jacet sepultus inclytus rex

Arthurus in insula Avalonia." (Here lies buried the renowned King Arthur in the Isle of Avalon).

Nor is this the only piece of Arthurian legend connected with Pembrokeshire. The early name of Cilgerran was, as we have seen Dyngeraint, or the fortress of Geraint, a knight of Arthur; again, a tale was told to William the Conqueror, while visiting St Davids, that the bones of Sir Gawaine, another round Table knight, had been discovered at Walwyn's Castle; on the Precelly slopes we find legends of a battle fought by Arthur's sons, while near Narberth is an earthwork called Blaengwaithnoe, said by some to mean Noe's Fort. Noe was son to King Arthur.

After the death of the Lord Rhys in 1196 his sons quarrelled for possession of Cilgerran, first one, then the other seizing the fortress, until 1204 when it was taken by William Marshall, Earl of Pembroke. His tenure was not peaceful, for Llywelyn ap Iorwerth, with a host of chieftains and a great following, took the Castle in 1213; it remained with the Welsh for several years, but in 1223 William Marshall the younger must have been in possession, for it is stated that he rebuilt it at this date. The ruins now standing are generally believed to be his work.

The Marshall family held Cilgerran until the death of their representative, George de Cantilupe (son of the younger William's sister Eva) in 1272, when it lapsed to the King. The Crown appointed as custodians successively, Henry de Bray, Nicholas, son of Martin of Kernes, and William de Valence. Then it reverted to John de Hastings, whose mother was George de Cantilupe's sister.

In 1387 Cilgerran appears in a list of fortresses damaged or destroyed while in custody of William de Beauchamp, Lord of Pembroke and Abergavenny; probably after this it was dismantled, for we do not hear of a siege by Owain Glyndwr, nor did it play any known part in the Civil Wars, and though granted to various royal and other persons, seems from this time to have fallen out of the active game of war, and now only shows to view a romantic and fascinating ruin, whose uncared-for condition is a matter of regret to every visitor.

Pigot & Co. South Wales directory for 1844 Kilgerran

Is a small and irregularly built town, in the parish and hundred of its name, county of Pembroke; 3½ miles S.E. from Cardigan, and 9 W. by N. from Newcastle-in-Emlyn; situated on the south bank of the river Tivie. This little place was once celebrated for its magnificent Castle, the ruins of which occupy a rocky promontory, rising almost perpendicularly from the bed of the river, forming an interesting and picturesque object from many points of the neighbourhood. The town is governed by a portreeve, who is Lord of the manor for the time being. And holds a court leet twice a year. Many of the inhabitants obtain their subsistence from the Salmon fishery, for which purpose the coracle, a kind of portable boat, is in general use - almost every cottage door being furnished with this indispensable requisite, which is carried on the backs of the men or women to the water's edge. Slates of good quality are obtained in the vicinity of the town; and every burgess having by charter an undisputed right to open a quarry, many cargoes are annually exported from the contiguous port of Cardigan. The manufacture of strong shoes is also a branch which employs many hands.

The Church, which presents nothing in outward shew to command attention, contains some ancient monuments, and a few well-extracted ones of modern date: the living is a vicarage, in the gift of the crown. A Chapel each for Baptists and Wesleyan Methodists are the other places of worship in the parish. No Market is now observed; but the fairs (large ones for horses, cattle, sheep and pigs) are held on the 21st of August and 13th of November. The parish contained, in 1831, 879 inhabitants; and in 1841, 1,149.

POST. - Letters arrive from and are despatched to Cardigan daily.

Industry

An economic asset of the gorge that had been exploited since the medieval period is stone - the durable Teifi valley slate stone that characterises so many buildings in the region. It is the stone from which Cilgerran Castle itself is made, physical evidence of an industry which is recorded in the reputed rights of the burgesses of Cilgerran to dig for stone, without payment, for their own use.

A fee was payable if the stone was taken outside the borough. Seventeenth century leases also refer to slate quarrying. Despite this long history of quarrying for both building stone, and roofing slate, the industry seems to have been limited to numerous small workings until the mid 19th century.

However, from the 1850s-1860s onwards, the industry was mechanised using steam power, and the arrival of the Whitland and Cardigan Railway at Cilgerran, in 1885, allowed for greater export. These factors led to the emergence of larger enterprises, with smaller quarries still serving local needs. The decline in the slate industry began in the early decades of the 20th century, and production of stone and slate ceased in the 1930s, although some bulk extraction was undertaken in the latter part of the century. There are two main groups of quarries, the Town Quarries on the slopes below the town and Fforest a little way downstream. Despite all this activity the valley retained a rural aspect, and even at the peak of the industry contemporary maps, such as the tithe map of c.1840, show the sides of the gorge as heavily wooded. These wooded slopes, with the Castle, and the river below, have long been renowned as a beauty spot, attracting the attention of Romantic tourers and artists of the 18th and early 19th centuries. In search of the 'Picturesque', they would slowly coast downstream in order to view, sketch and paint the ruins of Cilgerran Castle. They included Richard Wilson, and J M W Turner who made several studies of the Castle. The gorge itself attracted their attention - Samuel Lewis, in 1833, described the 'sylvan beauties of the scene... rich groves, alternating with the naked rock, continue to excite the admiration of the traveller'.

Cilgerran and the quarrying industry had Long been closely linked, burgesses having had the right to dig for stone within the Teifi Gorge, where all the major quarries were located. Some of the stone- processing buildings, including a dressing-shed, were located in the town. The wealth of the industry at its peak, in the late 19th century, is reflected in the town's buildings, many of which were clearly built or rebuilt at this time using local stone. Some further growth of the town occurred, doubtless encouraged by the Whitland - Cardigan railway line, which was incorporated in 1869 (but closed in the 1960s). A Chapel was established, and a brickworks, although brick is not a common building material in the town. However, the weekly Market recorded by George Owen ended in the early 1900s; the Fair had been discontinued many years previously, while quarrying ceased in 1938. The abolition of the lordship in 1536 had already seen the abandonment and decline of Cilgerran Castle. It saw no action during the Civil War and was allowed to become a ruin, albeit the source of inspiration to Romantic painters. The ditch became the town pound, and as a result of quarrying carried out around the Castle, a large stretch of the Castle wall itself fell in 1863. However, it has been in the care of the state since 1943 and is now one of the chief visitor attractions of the region.

Cilgerran slate quarries

A series of slate quarries stretching for c.1.5km east of Cilgerran Castle and along the south bank of the river Teifi. The quarries are depicted on the 1st edition Ordnance Survey of 1889 and include the Castle Quarries and Plain and Cefn quarries. At this date some quarries were operational and other were disused. Slate was transported from these quarries by boat along the Teifi to Cardigan for onward transhipment. A wharf is located adjacent to the quarries.

Cilgerran Wharves, River Teifi

Wharf located on the south bank of the river Teifi and serving the slate industry. From here slate was shipped to Cardigan for onward transport. The wharf served a number of slate quarries situated along the river bank as depicted on the 1st Edition Ordnance Survey of 1889, including the Cefn and Plain quarries and quarry Dol-bAdau.

Sites of Interest

Cilgerran,-- Stone in Churchyard Pembrokeshire

Another interesting stone is found, standing erect, on the south side of the Church, within the Church-yard of Cilgerran, Pembrokeshire, near Cardigan. It measures about eight feet high, by a foot and a half wide, and about the same thickness. It is formed of the hard Green stone of the neighbouring Preseley hills, and half of its length was buried in the earth and had to be excavated. It is to be Read, —

TRENEQUSSI FILI MACUTRENI HIC IACIT

(The body) of Trenegussus the son of Macutrenus lies here.

The letters of the inscription are very irregular in size, some being two inches, and others as much as four-and-a-half inches, in height. They are of a mixed character, the first T being semi-uncial, with the bottom of the vertical stroke bent towards the right. Every E has the middle cross bar greatly elongated. The sixth letter of the upper line is very faint in the rubbings, but sufficient is shown to prove I think satisfactorily that it is intended for a debased minuscule g. The two S's are also of the minuscule character, as is the F in the word FILI. The fourth letter in the second line I prefer reading U rather than LI united, the whole letter being united without a break in the strokes. The H in HIC is of an unusual shape, and the T at the end of the inscription is quite minuscule, with a dash for the top cross stroke. The terminal letters in the second line are much crowded together, but all are distinct, and not enclavies as is often the case where there is a want of space.

On the north side of this stone, that is, on its north- east edge (for the inscription faces the east), there appears to be an Ogham inscription all down the edge.

The rubbing which I have received does not exhibit these incisions very distinctly; but there are two groups of five oblique dashes of equal length near one end, and towards the other end are two similar dashes, preceded by a single one; there are traces of another pair still lower, and the edge of the stone seems to be notched all the way down. In the middle of the side of the stone there appears to have been a cross, with the arms of equal length, slightly and rudely incised.

RCAM Inscribed Stone

In the churchyard stands a bilingual Latin Ogam inscribed stone. It is of oblong form 60 in above the soil which now conceals a few of the the letters. The Latin inscription reads – TRENEGUSI

FILI MACUTRENI IliC IACIT ;

the Ogam – TRENAGUSU MAGUI MAGUI TRENI

One of the sides bears a faint Latin cross (Westwood Lapid walliae 110)

Forest

The site of the home of a notable Welsh family, the Lloyds of Forest of which residence not a vestige is left. The earlier name seems to have been Cefn y Drum “the top of the ridge” from its position on a high bank overlooking the Teifi valley. From the quantity of wood which grew on the land it acquired the name of Forest yn nqhefn y drum, and the mansion towards the end of the 14th century was called y plas yn nghefn y drum --Visited 6th July 1915.

Glandovan; Glandofen, Cilgerran

Glandavon is a c.1660 country house in whitewashed roughcast (mostly covered in creeper) with a hipped slate roof and paired bracket eaves. The roof has a centre valley and two big axial three-shaft rendered stacks. There is a two-storey five-window front of timber cross- windows with slate sills and a centre early 19th century 6-panel door with sidelights in an early 19th century timber porch of two Roman Doric columns, pilaster responds, and cornice. The house is to a regular square plan with a centre rear stair projection also hipped. There is an added block in the rear.

The interior, in a Renaissance square plan, is typical of the later 17th century. The staircase is exceptional in Scale though relatively crude in detail, open-well, with plain string, square newels, carved finials and pendants, and turned balusters. The two front rooms and parlour have plastered panelled ceilings, with simple mouldings framing the beams. The kitchen has three exposed beams, and the remains of a small stair to the left of the fireplace. Three ornate figured wood doors were introduced from Surrey in the 20th century. Two upstairs bedrooms have similar plastered panelled ceilings, and there is some fielded panelling to the wall to the small centre room.

On the east of the forecourt are two stone early 19th century gatepiers. Reference: Cadw listed buildings database.

Cefngarth Tumulus

A low and apparently undisturbed circular mound, the appearance of which suggests its sepulchral origin. The circumference is about 250ft and height 3ft. Recent ploughings have revealed a small quantity of white quartz in the mound, not elsewhere visible on the surface of the field. A few yards north east of it is the stump of what is said to have been a natural boulder which was known as “Marbl Samson” – visited 6th July 1915

Cilgerran

Cilgerran is a small town in Pembrokeshire, on the River Teifi and near the site of Cilgerran

Castle, built in 1100. The Castle is thought to have been captured by Owen Glyndwr in 1405. It is probably one of the most picturesque castles in Wales and has been painted by many artists including Joseph Mallord William Turner.

The town is first mentioned in 1204 from when it was the administrative centre for a lordship until the 16th century. Although the town remained small it was considered one of the main Market centres in Pembrokeshire in the 17th century. The churchyard of St Llawddog contains a megalithic standing stone or Ogham stone upon which Ogham writing can still be seen. Annual coracle races, started in 1950, attract competitors from all over the world. RCAHMW, 2009.

Castell;Cwmbettws Defended Enclosure,

An earthwork enclosure, of uncertain date, formed from the tip of a west-facing spur, set between two stream valleys : a roughly oval area, about 22-26m east-west by 22m, tapering to the west, is defined by a ditch cutting across the ridge against rising ground on the east & elsewhere by degraded earthwork banks, set about the levelled interior. J.Wiles 22.03.05

Kilrhedyn (Cil-Rhedyn)

Kilrhedyn (Cil-Rhedyn), a parish, in the union of Newcastle-Emlyn, chiefly in the hundred of Elvet, county of Carmarthen, and partly in that of Kilgerran, county of Pembroke, South Wales,

5 miles (S.W) from Newcastle Emlyn; containing 1108 inhabitants, of whom 857 are in the Carmarthenshire, and 251 in the Pembrokeshire, portion. This place is situated on the Star road leading from Carmarthen to Cardigan, and has the parish of Kenarth on the north, Trelech-ar-Bettws on the south, Penboy on the east, and Clydey on the west. The parish is intersected by the small river Cych, which here forms the boundary line between the two counties; and comprises 7856 acres, whereof 1296 acres are arable, and the remainder consists of woodland and heath, including a considerable extent of turbary. The river Pedran also winds through the lands, which are in some parts low and flat, and in others hilly, ornamented occasionally with oak and other timber; the chief produce is corn .

In the parish are two neat residences, Glbsbant and Dyfryn.

The living is a rectory, rated in the King's Books at £8. 12. 8d, and in the patronage of the Lord

Chancellor; net income, £192. The Church, situated in Pembrokeshire, and dedicated to St. Teilo, contains 152 sittings. There are places of worship for Independents, Baptists, and Presbyterians; and some Sunday schools.

The parish is detached from any high road, and situated near the East Cleddy river. The living is a perpetual curacy, endowed with £800 royal bounty, and £400 parliamentary grant; net income, £60; patron, the Rev. Thomas Thomas ; impropriator, W. H. Scourfield, of the Mote, esq., whose tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £44. 10., with a glebe of 48 acres. 2 rod. 25 perch., valued at £24. 7. per annum. The Church, dedicated to St. Martin, has been rebuilt, and is a very neat edifice. The Baptist denomination have a place of worship here, and two Sunday schools are held, one of them in connexion with the Established Church, and the other supported by the Baptists.

In the parish is an artificial mount, which is surrounded by a hedge, about fifty yards in diameter, and is supposed to have been formed for defence at some early period.

1870-72 John Marius Wilson, Imperial Gazetteer of England and Wales

This benefice is a perpetual curacy, which formed part of the possessions of the Knights of St. John, of Jerusalem at Slebech, and was given to that Preceptory by Wizo, the Flemish Lord of Wiston, Walter his son and Walter, the grandson of Wizo, as is shown by the confirmatory charter of Bishop Anselm, which describes the Church as "ecclesiam Sancti Martini de Villa Clarenbaldi." The Church was still appropriated to the Preceptory of Slebech in 1533, and was valued in the Valor Eccl at £6.

By 1594 it had come into the King's hands. - Owens Pem.

31 May, 1649, the inhabitants of Clarbeston applied to the Committee for Compounding, appointed by the Commonwealth, for an augmentation for their minister, who had only £10 a year, while the tithes which were held by Sir John Stepney of Prendergast, Bart., amounted to £21. On 1 Oct, 1649, Sir John Stepney's fine of £1230 was ordered to be reduced to £530 on his settling £70 a year on the rectories of Clarbeston, Llanycefn, Egremont, and Little Newcastle. Papers.

It would appear from the records in the Diocesan Registry that considerable difficulty had always been experienced in filling this living, long vacancies having occurred at different times.

Clarbeston . —Here in present use is the only complete service of pewter in the County. It consists of a Chalice and Cover, Credence Paten, and Flagon with no marks. The cup which is similar in design to that at Reynoldston, was restored by a former incumbent, the Rev, Iorwerth Grey Lloyd, F.S.A., now Vicar of Slebech. On the bowl which is beaker-shaped is inscribed " Clarbeston 1709." Height, 6 in.; diam. of bowl, 3 in.; depth, 4 in. The stem is a short baluster and is now secured to the bowl by a screw and bolt. The cover fits tightly The Credence Paten is 7 in. in diam. The Flagon is a graceful little Tankard with a nearly flat cover, thumb-piece to raise the lid, and handle. These pieces are probably of the same date as the Chalice, viz. 1709.

Education

On 4 Dec., 1840, the schoolroom near the Church was licensed for divine service during the rebuilding of the Church

Parish of Clarbeston The State of Education in Wales 1847

On the 8th of December I visited the above parish. The only schools were a Sunday school held at Carmel Baptist Chapel and another in the Church. The parish was entirely destitute of any means of education. There had been a school held in a part of a house called the Poorhouse, which had been given up about two months ago as the master could not get anyone to attend. He said if he could get but ten children he would keep on the school. A poor widow woman, into whose house I went, told me that she had a family of eight children , and her only support was her son, a lad of about 17 years of age , and a blacksmith by trade. She said she could not possibly give her children education and victuals. Labourers in the parish were wretchedly poor and totally unable to send their children to school if they had to pay for it. Wages were 8d per day with food or 10d per day without. The cottage I was in was a wretchedly dirty place. The pig was walking about the house as one of the inmates. I saw six children; they appeared quite unaccustomed to see strangers and were as wild as possible. I could not get them near me so as to have an opportunity of asking any questions.

Clydey (Clydai)

Clydau (sometimes Clydaï or Clydey) is a village, parish, and community in the Hundred of Kilgerran in Pembrokeshire, Wales. The village is a small group of houses around the parish Church, 8 km south-west of Newcastle Emlyn and 13 km south east of Cardigan. Although the village is tiny, the parish is large, encompassing several larger hamlets including Bwlchygroes and Star, the village of Tegryn, and a large number of scattered farms.

The River Cneifa, a tributary of Afon Cych, divides the parish into two ancient divisions. A remote upland area with no classified roads, the community is a bastion of the Welsh language.

Topographical Dictionary of Wale S Lewis 1839

Clydey (CLYDAI), a parish, in the union of Newcastle-Emlyn, hundred of Kilgerran, county of Pembroke, South Wales, 6 miles (S. W.) from Newcastle-Emlyn; containing 1268 inhabitants, and comprising 5000 acres. This place, which occupies the north-eastern extremity of the county, until lately formed the endowment of a prebend in the cathedral of St Davids, rated in the King's Books at £12, and in the gift of the Bishop. The living is a discharged vicarage, rated in the King's Books at £6, endowed with £600 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of the Bishop: the tithes have been commuted for £387, of which £250 are payable to the Ecclesiastical Commissioners, £125 to the vicar, and £12 to an impropriator. The Church, dedicated to St. Clydai, is a substantial structure, with a massive square tower. There are places of worship for Baptists, Independents, and Calvinistic Methodists; and four Sunday schools, supported by the dissenters. Fairs are held at Hênveddau, in the parish, on September 27th and October 30th.

A large Church approaching a state of ruin. It consists of a nave and chancel with south aisle extending along both, a western tower, all of the rude Welsh type and probably of the Perpendicular period. The arcade is of four low and depressed arches, three in the nave and one in the chancel, The chancel arch is rude pointed There is a rood door set high up, and on the north side is the projection for the staircase. The windows are all square headed and perpendicular, chiefly of three lights; and have some fragments of stained glass. The tower is of very rude construction, is vaulted, and opens to the nave by a very course pointed arch. There is a ladder to the belfry story, which opens to the nave by another pointed rude door . The tower is without string or buttress, is embattled with slit openings and a rude door. The font is a circular cup on a square base, chamfered. Everything is decayed and out of repair. There is a stoup by the south door. The outer walls are whitewashed. In the churchyard wall are some curious early inscribed stones.

RCAM – The Parish Church dedicated to St Clydai.

The Church has several times been restored and and renovated during the past half century, so that few of its original features remain. It consists of a chancel nave, south aisle and west tower, the south aisle is known as capel Mair. In the south wall of this aisle is an aumbry, 15in square; and in the north wall of the nave are the entrance and three former stairs to the former rood loft; while in the south wall, by the side of a now closed door, is a stoup. The tower, a square of 17ft 6in, is of two storeys, the ground floor being vaulted, and four feet below the level of the nave. The belfry originally opened into the nave by a pointed arch now blocked. The battlements have been renewed. The font basin is set upon a modern base; it measures 22in by 29in with a depth of 18in. It bears an ornament of similar design to that on one of the memorial stones at St Dogmael's Abbey. The fragments of stained glass noticed by Sir Stephan Glynne in 1860 have been removed – Visited 16th June 1920.

The State of Education in Wales 1847

Clydey is an agricultural area, labourers receive 6s a week on their own finding. There is no resident Clergyman but there is one land proprietor resident. Dr Jones does not contribute to a school but is willing to grant a site to build one. The moral character of the the population is recorded as "good". It is not known how many children are not in receipt of any education. For the most part the people of the parish cannot read or write. – Rev Thomas James Curate of Clydey, Cardigan.

Lost Churches In Wales.

To The Editor Of The Arch. Camb. Oct. 30, 1863.

Sir,—For the information of an " Old Member," I herewith send you a list of several lost churches. In the parish of Clydey, Pembrokeshire, celebrated for its inscribed stones of an early Christian date, there exists on the farm of Plas yr bendy an oblong-square mound, the site of a lost Chapel called " Cappel Mair" (St. Mary's Chapel). The ruins are covered with turf, but easily traced. The mother Church of Clydey contains a very ancient monument to the memory of a family living at Cappel Mair, probably at Plas yr Hendy.

Castell y Blaidd

This is a tumulus, not a Castle; though the possibility that it may have been both should not be hastily dismissed. There is however, nothing beyond the word “Castell” to support the latter identification, while there is good but not first hand evidence to prove its sepulchral purpose. It shows as a low, circular, grass-grown mound, having an average height of 2ft and a circumference of about 150ft, and bears evident signs of being opened. The field within it stands has been subdivided, the intervening hedge carried directly over the mound. The site is within a few yards of the boundary between the counties of Pembroke and Carmarthen, and nearly at the junction of two important roads. Visited 17th September 1914

Crug Bach

This is a mound on the south eastern margin of Rhos y llyn, a small lake which both the name and the situation prove to have once existed here. The mound is evidently sepulchral and does not appear to have been disturbed. Its height is 5ft and circumference at base about 250ft. There formerly stood a second mound known as Crug y llyn, on the south west margin of the same lake. The site is now occupied by a farm house of the name, and no trace remains of the mound. Visited 27th December 1914.

Caer Hen Feddau

About 200yds north east of the hamlet of hen Feddau, and on a field styled Parc y Gaer is a slight circular depression 15ft in diameter. It is said to present the same appearance as it has always done within living memory. It is undoubtedly ancient, and the site is probably that of a dismantled tumulus; against which suggestion stands the field name of Parc y Gaer, unless that name is a substitution for and earlier Parc y Garn –Visited 27th October 1914.

Castlell Crychydd ; the heron's Castle

This is a fine mound and Bailey earthwork, well placed on the spur of a gentle Hill at an altitude of 500ft and commanding a clear view on all sides except the south, where the land rises slightly. The fall to the river Cynnifa is by a gradual slope of about a mile. The Pem Arch Survey gives the following description of this earthwork :-

The Heron's Castle is a very interesting camp. Situated on the blunt end of a Hill is a sort of tump surrounded by a deep ditch dug through slatey soil. All the soil has been heaped up on the tump, thus levelling up the space on which may have stood a wooden castalet, and forming a bank from 8 to 18ft high. On the western side is a lane 175yds long with a bank on each side. This is in fact a covered way leading to water. This covered way also forms the defence of an area between the castalet and the water on the north western side. This area is protected on the other sides by the tump and a bank and forms an outer ward of the camp; The entrance to this last was formed by a bank across the ditch from this outer ward. The builders of the “Heron's Castle” had advanced very considerably in the art of fortification, and protected the water supply. Perhaps we should not be far wrong if we ascribed this Castell to the period of the English /Welsh wars.

Fenton (Tours p 487) calls this camp Nant y Castell, and says that he picked up bits of Pottery there which may be

Roman?.

The mound is completely surrounded by a dry moat 10ft wide, except on the western side , where the soil was left to form the entrance from the courtyard into the mound Castle. From the bottom of the moat the mound rises to an average height of 18ft. The summit, which has a diameter of 30ft has been hollowed out to an unusual depth of about 7ft, and the fall from the circumference to the centre is fairly regular on all sides. The courtyard or Bailey, which is somewhat irregular in shape measures 90ft by 30ft . It is protected by a bank of 5ft interior height falling on the outside to a shallow ditch 6ft in width. On the side furthest from the mound the ditch becomes a lane leading to a spring still known as Ffynnon Castell, while the well field is called Parc Castell --Visited 15th June 1920

Castell Crychudd;Castell Cicydd

'Heron's Castle': the embanked motte encloses an area some 24m across, showing a clear causewayed entrance into the banked & ditched Bailey enclosure on the west, which is some 70m north-west to south-east by 38m: the earthworks on the west, where the Bailey rests on a stream, may represent some form of water management feature (a mill, or fishpond).

Motte and Bailey Castle in very good state of preservation. The Castle mound rises 20ft (6.1m) above the encircling ditch. The mound is saucer shaped and the interior is 12ft (3.6m) below the edges. Bailey bank exists on north and south On the west the ground is scarped. Source: Extract from Cadw FMW report, 1950.

Inscribed Stones

The following inscribed stones removed from various sites in the parish, have been placed in the parish Church for better preservation.

1] A stone which formerly stood built into the wall of the churchyard, immediately beyond the lych gate, having probably been placed there after one of the restorations of the Church or upon reparation of the churchyard wall. The close of rough ground directly to the north east of the Church is called Parc Y Maen and there can be no doubt that this was a former and probably the original site of the boulder. It is 5ft in length, of irregular shape and thickness “ The legend is in Roman capitals of a debased type with a tendency to minuscule form” The inscription reads
SOLINI FILIVS VENDONI There are no Ogam scores.

The latest scholar to examine the stone Prof R.A.S. Macalister of Dublin, believes it to have originally borne an Ogam which has broken away “I judge this” he adds “from the appearance of the angle which would have been inscribed, for no trace of the scores remains

2] The earlier position of this stone was within the churchyard “close to” (according to Brash). “forming part of” (Westwood), the north wall. It measures 4ft high, 13 in broad, 11 in thick at the centre, and has supported a sundial. The Latin reads

ETERNI FILI VICTOR

while the Ogam (reading the longer line upwards and the shorter line downwards) represents

ETTERN ...TOR.

“The first E of the ogam is not very plain; but in view of the unmistakable E of the Latin, there can be little doubt that the Ogam once read something like the following

ETTERNI MAQUI FICTO” (Brash)

3] The third stone now in Clydai Church is said to have once stood in “an old chappel in the churchyard” but at a date not far beyond living memory was removed to the farm of Dugood, about two miles north of the Church, where it lay until restored to the Church by the late Mr Henry Owen D.C.L., a member of this Commission.

The monument is of especial importance as bearing not only a memorial inscription in both Latin and Ogam, but also an equal arms cross within a circle. The form of the cross is similar though not identical with many of the earliest crosses that are found in the Celtic areas of the British Isles.”The entire length of the stone is 4ft 3in, breadth at bottom 11 ½ ins, at top 14in and from 3 to 4 in in thickness” (Brash). The readings appear to be :

in Latin, DOBOT[VCI] FILIUS EVOLENG

in Ogam DOV[O]T[A]C[O]S.

The stone came into notice through the enquiries made by Edward Lhuyd, keeper of the Ashmolean Museum, Oxford, of the Clergy and others of the Principality in the year 1698. Lhuyd may himself visited Clydai; but at any rate one of his assistance who reached the place took a sketch of the inscription, and this sketch, or a copy of it, passed at Lhuyd's death in 1709 to Mr John Anstis, in whose collection, now in the British Museum, it has been preserved. The sketch is extremely rude, and is evidently the work of one who has been told to be a faithful copyist of the letters and markings that he saw upon the stone, but who was not equal to a drawing of the cross

Westwood adds: “If, as may be conjectured, the cross with its double lined stem and transverse lined base is a subsequent addition to the stone, some of the older letters may have been cut through” Brash remarks; “This stone most truly tells its own tale. It was originally selected as the sepulchral memorial of some Gaedhelic worthy, and his name and patronymic inscribed in Ogam on the angle reading from the bottom or broad end upwards.... At some later period it was transformed into the grave pillar of another personage, whose inscription was cut on the face of the stone in the letters and language introduced by their Roman Masters and the universal in Britain.

It was evidently removed from its pagan cemetery, and the cross having been inscribed upon the broader end which originally went into the ground it was turned bottom upwards and placed either as a monument or as a consecrated emblem of Christianity adjoining the Christian Church. That the cross had nothing to do with either of the inscriptions is quite evident from the fact that the commencement of both should of necessity be buried in the earth when the cross end was turned upward. An additional evidence is the partial defacement of the Latin inscription by the long vertical and transverse scores cut in the face of the stone, or which may have been a portion of an intended shaft to the wheel cross such as I have often seen on other pillar stones” (Arch Camb 1874 p283)

In the summer of 1921 the inscriptions at Clydai were carefully examined by Prof R.A.S. Macalister of Dublin. Of the stone under consideration he observes:

“ I have no hesitation in reading

DOBITVCI FILIUS EVOLENGI;

the lettering has been cut into by the stem of a later formed cross, but every letter except the first I is quite distinct”.

Carn y Fran

The cairn which is known to have occupied this site about 300yds east of Castell Crychydd has been cleared away –Visited 15 June 1920

Pant y Maen

There has been considerable clearance of stone from this field among which may have been the ruins of a cairn –Visited 17th September 1914.

Crug y mynach

The map attached to the Tithe Schedule shows the site as Crug y Mynach. ‘The monks grave mound’. So far as it can be located, this appears to have been at the western angle of two country roads about 200yds north of Fron fedw cottages, and directly north of the Glog quarries. A mound was cleared away about 60yrs ago, when what was described by an old inhabitant of the parish as “a piece of bronze” was discovered –Visited 14th June 1920.

Hen feddau

This name is now borne by a small hamlet in the south eastern part of the parish, a few yards from the Carmarthenshire boundary. Fenton (Tour 484) speaks of “lines of parallel ridges of considerable length, overthrown with heath, and seemingly of antiquity, a little to the right of the ancient road hereabouts known by the popular name of Sarnau, but a thorough investigation of them I reserve for my tour through the country they are in”- that is, the county of Carmarthen, but the opportunity does not appear to have presented itself. He continues”The tradition is that that there was a great battle fought here, and that the bodies of the slain were deposited in the regularly semi cylindrical ridges” No trace of graves could be found in the immediate vicinity of the village of Hen feddau; nor were any traditions of such known to several old people of the place; so that it seems probable that Fenton's remarks are intended to apply to Parc y beddau in the parish Cilrhedyn west, now in the county of Pembroke, but formerly in that of Carmarthen, where there certainly are “lines of parallel ridges of considerable length”--- Visited 27th October 1914.

Hendre Cymry

“Here” says Fenton (Tour 487) “I turn down the slope of a Hill to a place called Hendrev Cymry, by its name and accompanying tradition the site of an old British town, to which I observed a paved road leading that began at the base of the Hill”

NB The name denotes rather a medieval trev or township that was occupied wholly or chiefly by Welsh tribesmen, and administered according to Welsh custom.

Dolau llannerch

It would appear that it was originally a churchyard cross, whilst it is also recorded as an (Ogham) inscribed stone. J.Wiles 28.02.02 RCAHMW

Hen Caerau, west Cilrhedyn

A near-circular earthwork enclosure, set upon a slight shelf on ground falling to the north-west, having an internal diameter of 28-32m & being defined by two concentric banks, the work being some 56m across overall: destroyed by cultivation on the south-west and otherwise generally ploughed down. Capel Mair

A writer in an early volume of Arch Camb (1864 p178) states that “in the parish of Clydey, there exists on the farm of Plas yr Hendy an oblong square mound , the site of a lost Chapel valled Cappel Mair (St Mary's Chapel) the ruins are covered with turf but easily traced.” The site could not be located, nor is anything remembered of such a building. The south aisle of the parish Church is known as Capel Mair and there may be some confusion.

Finds

Stone Axe

On the occasion of the visit of the Cambrian Archaeological Association to Cardigan in the year 1859, a stone axe said to have been found at Bwlch blaen euerfa in this parish (Arch Camb 1859 p349) was exhibited Its present whereabouts is not known.

Hoard of Bronze Implements

What is said to be the most considerable find of bronze implements hitherto recorded as having occurred in Wales was made in the autumn of 1859. It is especially important to fix upon the exact spot where the discover took place but a difficulty arises from the vagueness of the meagre accounts published on the subject. Dr Walter D Jones of Glan Cuch possessed the greater number of the objects forming the hoard but wrote a short account two years after the occurrence in which he states that “ in the course of draining a bog near Henfeddau some curious pike heads and other remains of ancient British weapons and found a pit of turbary peat about 3ft deep”

The find is now represented by 31 separate pieces at St David's College Lampeter presented by Dr Jones and two spearheads and the butt end of a spear now in the Museum of the Carmarthenshire antiquarian Society. Seen 13th October 1920

Dugout

About the year 1903 a boat fashioned out of a single oak baulk was discovered at a depth of 8ft in a peat bog upon a farm of Nant Ifan fawr. It was uninjured, with the exception that its sides has been somewhat flattened by the pressure of superincumbent earth. It measures 9ft 3in in length interior depth of 12 in from thwarts to a perfectly flat bottom which has a width of 22 in; the trunk had been hollowed out to an average thinness of 6in.. There is no keel. The bow is pointed, and traces of rowlocks for paddles remain on both sides. After exposure to all weathers in the farmyard for nearly 20 years its true character was recognised by our Assistant Inspection Officer, and by the generosity of its discoverers it has been presented to the museum of the Carmarthenshire Antiquarian Society.

COEDCANLASS (COED-CANLAIS), a parish, in the union and hundred of Narberth, county of Pembroke, South Wales, 8 miles (S. E. by S.) from Haverfordwest; containing 245 inhabitants. This small parish is situated on the eastern bank of Milford Haven, from which there is a ferry to Llangwm, on the opposite shore; and is five miles distant from Pembroke, across the ferry at Lawrenny. The substratum of the soil is a fine limestone rock, which is quarried to a considerable extent. The living is a donative, with a stipend of £20 per annum, paid by Sir John Owen, Bart., the impropiator.

The Church is a small picturesque building of great antiquity, repaired some years since, at the expense of Sir John Owen: divine service is only occasionally performed in it, but burials generally, the remaining ecclesiastical rites being celebrated at Martletwy. Here are the ruins of an ancient mansion, which bore the same name as the parish, and belonged to the family of Percival. The average annual expenditure for the support of the poor is £9 15s.

1923 RCAM . The Parish Church (St Mary's)??

The Church of this parish exists no longer except as a shapeless and indescribable ruin. It was once a free Chapel, to which the Episcopal Registers of St Davids under the year 1401 record the admission of John Diane, clerk, "to the free Chapel of the blessed Mary of Coed Kenlace," who, "touching the most holy gospels, took a corporal oath of canonical obedience, and that he would Faithfully cause divine services to be conducted in the said Chapel as had been accustomed of ancient times".

About the year 1600 George Owen describes it as being "in decay" (Pem., ed. Henry Owen, i, 309). According to Browne Willis the Chapel was rebuilt by Sir Arthur Owen of Orielton (d.

1753); but this probably means merely that it was so far repaired as to permit of services being held therein. The last nomination to the curacy took place in 1830.

This benefice was originally a free Chapelry. Whether it ever belonged to the Knights of St. John at Slebech is uncertain. It does not figure in the list of the possessions of that house, but as will be seen from the extract from the Valor Ecc. given below, an annual pension of 2s. a year was payable to the Preceptor of Slebech.

However this may have been, the Chapel belonged in 1535/4 to John Butler of Coedeenlas. By 1594 it had been acquired by purchase by Benston, and the edifice was then in decay. - Owen Pem. The Chapel afterwards came into the possession of the Owens of Orielton.

Coadcanlass Chapel., having laid 60 years in ruins, was neatly built on the Old Foundation, and endowed by Sir Arthur Owen, Bart., anno 1718. - M.S. Browne Willis. At the present time the Chapel is again in Ruins.

Coedcanlas House

On gently sloping ground west of Martletwy, overlooking Beggar's Reach on the Daugleddau, is the great house and garden at Coedcanlas. In 1362 it was in the ownership of Sir John Carew and down the ages it passed to several different owners, including the Owens of Orielton in the mid-seventeenth century. Here, as at Landshipping, historical research and follow-up aerial photography have revealed the extensive earthworks of lost formal gardens, thought to have been established by the late seventeenth century. To the north of the house, in an area known as the 'Old Garden', earthworks of a former water garden survive, partly wooded. More extensive earthworks to the south survive in a field known as the 'Hop Garden'. Although at first glance the field would appear to be open pasture bisected by a stream and an oval pond, faint grids and squares can also be made out. A larger, square enclosure on the east side of the central stream is flanked on the west side by a series of six 'box-like' enclosures along the edge of the field. These appear to be the footings of former walled gardens, surrounded by moats or ditches and once containing paths, plants and trees. Although we have no direct record of the construction of these elaborate formal gardens, they are stylistically very similar to those at nearby Landshipping and may have been constructed by the same designer. RCAHMW

Coedcanlas Farmhouse,

Late medieval traces of vaulted under-Croft. Stone mullioned windows.

A stone-built, formerly vaulted, medieval first-floor Hall-house, which after alterations in the 19th century has the appearance of a 2 1/2-storey, end-chimney house of rectangular 3-unit plan with both 19th century and 20th century fenestration and doorways. It has a massive projecting chimney to the east gable-end, a medieval ground-floor doorway and a corbelled area to the west-gable. The west gable-end has a series of blocked stone-mullion windows and the north side has a pair of blocked 2-light stone ovolo-moulded mullion windows to the original first-floor, which span the present floors.

A large quarry comprising up to 5 large inroads including docks for vessels. The westernmost inroads extend for some 140m and creates a narrow waterway or dock 9m wide. A turning/warping berth is included. The waterway serving the quarry arm which extends northward to the edge of the St Mary's graveyard is also some 140m in length and appears to include a warping area at its northern end. The western arm doglegs through a narrow waterway (7m wide) to a Quay developed on the western bank. The warping area is some 20m x 19m. The total length of waterway is 120m. Immediately to south is a much shorter inroad/dock measuring 48m x 10m and another 20m x 20m. The quarries are now masked by tree cover and owned by the National Trust.

Garron Quarries west

A quarry with two inroads enhanced to create docks . The western inroad extends for some 100m with possibly a dredged channel extending some 80m. The warping area at the northern end is some 35m wide. The eastern inroad doglegs to a small square dock 23m x 15m. The dredged (?) channel for this dock is some 98m in length. Between the two is another berth, possibly awaiting berth for the western inroad, where 'Dock' is marked. This berth measures some 50m x 8m. The quarries went out of use in the early 20th century and are now masked by tree cover. The channels and berth are still well-defined.

Garron Quarries East

A quarry with two inroads enhanced to create docks . The waterway servicing the water inroad curves to the north-west extends for some 108m with possibly a dredged channel extending some 48m. The warping area at the northern end is some 45 x 38m. The dock is on the southern side. The eastern inroad is much straighter and the waterway extends for some 85m. There appears to be no dredged channel in the approach. Whilst the eastern inroad has been abandoned, the western is now a boatyard with small craft berths.

Garron Quarries

Cosheston –Church of St Michael & all Angels - according to Sir Stephen Richard Glynne “1842”

This Church is in a striking and elevated situation commanding a view over Milford Haven. It consists of a west tower, nave with north aisle, south transept, and chancel. The steeple is curious, - a small square embattled tower set over the west end, upon a kind of bracket, and surmounted by a small octagonal spire of stone. There is a kind of billet cornice below the battlement; the belfry windows quite open, and of rude work; two on the east side and one on each of the others. On the north side of the tower is a door by which there is an ascent to the steeple by rude stone steps outside the roof, there being rude stepping stones against (projecting from) the wall. The whole of the external walls seem to have been rebuilt in poor style. There are two oddly shaped, wide arches, much flattened between the nave and aisle. The pier seems to have been originally large square, and solid but is altered in an octagonal form. The windows were probably originally quite small. There is an arch to the transept, resembling those on the north side. The exterior is neat, but devoid of interest. The Chancel has open seats and a modern Gothic reredos.

NB This Church has been put into good repair in the year 1885. The Rector, the Rev T G Cree, had well restored the chancel some years previously.

Royal Commission of Ancient Monuments 1922

This Church consists of chancel, nave, north aisle, south transept known as the Paskeston Chapel, south porch and small turret at the west end. Under a faculty obtained in August 1885, "for rebuilding portions of the Church," much of the former structure disappeared, the present building being practically a new one on the old foundations. Remains of the rood stairs, and of a tomb recess in the Paskeston Chapel, have been retained. All the windows are modern as is the vestry. The pier between the north aisle and the nave was removed and an arcade substituted. It was refloored and tiled. In the north-west angle of the chancel a squint-passage to the north aisle was retained and is now used for the Organ; as was also the turret with its small octagonal stone spire, the vane on which is dated C.H. 1781. The spire was removed in 1980 and the vane replaced. The rood screen to the Paskeston Chapel, the rood beam, the wooden crucifix and the Bishop's Chair were carved by Mr John Mathias.

The entrance to the tower is by a flight of external stone steps. Under the nave wall between the Paskeston Chapel and the south doorway is a well, now covered, which is said to have been used formerly as an adult baptistery. The font is modern; the basin of an earlier font was for some times at the rectory but is now in the Church.

Churchyard Cross Only the base stone (26 in by 24 in) with square socket remains, apparently in its original position on the south side of the Church.

NB – The Church is entered in the Taxatio. of 1291 as “ecclesia Costyn” and there is no doubt the earlier form of the name of the parish was Costyn of Costonston. It appears as Costeyniston in the Inq. post mortem on William Robelyn in 26 Edw III (1358)

Non Conformist Chapels

There was originally a non-conformist Chapel called Nebo situated near Mount Pleasant Cosheston. This appears to have begun through the efforts of home mission and a place of worship was erected in 1832. It was linked with the Tabernacle Pembroke. In 1851 the average congregation was 20 in the morning and 55 in the evening

The Brewery

Village Pub- Victorian Front, concealing much earlier building. When I was younger it was not noted for keeping to licensing hours. They used to say that the police gave up trying to catch them "as a police car would have to come in from the main road at Slade Cross the down a steep Hill and up the other side before it could turn right by Ivor Kenneford's farm then on the road a bit to the Pub. The coppers pint would be flat by that time". By that time as well everyone would have had plenty of warning. (One evening I was there with my Uncle who was a Birmingham Solicitor and he was amazed when after midnight the hatch opened to the snug and a voice said "you Ok or would you like another round")

Carpenters Arms

There used to be another Pub the Carpenter's Arms of which Mrs Martin was the landlady. Every lunchtime and evening there was a crowd of the older residents in there seated round the fire. Some like old Pop Phillips (Father of Councillor Billy Phillips) had their own seat which no one else could sit on. My father used to use the excuse every dinnertime that he had to go to the Carpenter's arms for his pipe tobacco. The only time Pop Phillips was ever known to give up his seat was when a very pregnant lady went in the pub. He very quickly stood up and she sat down. After she left there was inquiry as to why he had offered his seat. His reply "I've delivered cows, horses and sheep but never a baby and I "din't" intend to start now".

Cosheston Hall.

Acc to Mjr Francis Jones

On 26 August 1556 Gelly Barret, gentlemen, of Gellyswick and his wife Mary sold 'a tenement called the "Hall of Cosheston" to John Rossant of Nash, Husbandman, and Isabel his wife, and it remained in the owner-ship of the Rossant family for several generations. In 1659 the will of John Rossant of Cosheston, yeoman, mentions the 'house called the Hall of Cosheston'. His son, Francis, was assessed at two hearths in 1670.

In 1786 the Hall was owned and occupied by Abraham Leach.

Just north of Cosheston village there was a farm called Snailton owned and occupied by Rev. William Holcombe. For a time the Allen family were in occupation including Seymour Phillips Allen (High Sheriff 1850) and his wife Lady Catherine, daughter of the 4th Earl of Portsmouth. Later, the name was changed to Woodfield and in 1894 it was occupied by George Stepney Gulston, and shortly afterwards bought by Major Ivor, afterwards Major-General Sir Ivor Philipps, K.C.B., D.S.O., who enlarged the house and gave it the name Cosheston Hall. The General died in 1940, and afterwards it was the seat of his daughter, Mrs. Basil Ramsden, and her son, Major Ivor Ramsden, M.B.E. (High Sheriff 1967) one of H.M. Gentlemen at Arms, and Deputy Lieutenant was the next owner-occupier. The Hall was entirely rebuilt in the mid 19th century.

Paskeston Hall

Paskeston Hall the earliest part of which is a three-storey traditional style house dating from c1730. The Hall itself was added some 120 years later. The family name associated with the building of the original house is that of Nicholas Roche, a High Sheriff of Pembrokeshire.

The house is about a mile north-west of Milton village, and built in the Georgian style, with a modern extension to one gable end. The first-known folk at Paskeston were yeomen, probably tenants, namely David Scurlock, yeoman (1559), George Ellys, gent. (1617) and William Jermin, gent. (1626) son of Rees Jermin, yeoman, after which came John Rossant, (1659) son and heir of James Rossant of Cosheston, yeoman. The Rossants belonged to the minor gentry and lived at Paskeston during the period 1659-1780, acquiring a small estate, the last of whom we find at Paskeston, being John Lewes Rossant, gent., and Mary his wife and John Rossant and John Lewes Rossant, gent., all of whom were living there in 1780.

It is likely that there was a farm as well as the mansion there, as early as 1724; Nicholas Rock of Paskeston, was High Sheriff in 1729, and in his will, proved in 1759, he mentions his sons, Nicholas, Mark, and George, and 'my kinsman' Thomas Roch of Butterhill. He was succeeded by his son Nicholas Roch of Cosheston, who succeeded his uncle (who was still there in 1815). Nicholas Roch of Paskeston died there in 1866, and was followed by his son, also named Nicholas Roch who is included in the Landowners' Return of 1873 as owning 944 acres.

The next gentry family there was that of Allen (kinsman of the Cresselly stock), who were mentioned at Paskeston in 1894. Newton Seymour Allen DSO of Paskeston was High Sheriff in 1919 and died in 1934.

1534 The Rector's annual income at Cosheston was calculated as being £10

On 16th July 1648 Oliver Cromwell invited the Rev. Peregrine Phillips of Cosheston to preach before him and his officers he was also vicar of Monkton St. Mary's (Pembroke), as well as Cosheston. Phillips must have been well known to most of them, for notwithstanding the inconveniences of the siege he preferred to reside in his parish of Monkton rather than in the comparatively peaceful Cosheston.

Peregrine Phillips was the son of that Vicar of Amroth who declined to Read the Book of Sports, and suffered accordingly; probably in consequence of the father's firmness the son found friends. Sir Hugh Owen had given him the preferment of Monkton; Roger Lort that of St. Mary's, Pembroke; and he obtained Cosheston through the interest of Sir John Meyrick. He had been chosen one of the committee to inquire into the conduct of ministers; but all this availed him nothing during the siege, for the hungry Parliamentary troopers searched his house so diligently that he was obliged to secrete his scanty stock of flour in the bolster of his bed. Yet Phillips stood to his post and with him remained a certain plucky servant-maid who was in the habit of milking the Parsons cow, "caring nought for the storm of shot and shell which hurtled" overhead

A gable end in the village of Monkton in Laws time marked the site of Phillips' old vicarage.

Acc/to J T Rees "History of Protestant Nonconformity in Wales" (1861)

the Oxford-educated Phillips, the son of a vicar of Amroth, was appointed to the Llangwm living after briefly serving as his uncles curate at Kidwelly. Pluralism was very common, and with the backing of such gentlemen as Sir Hugh Owen, Sir Roger Lort and Sir John Meyrick, he was soon preferred first to Monkton and then to Pembroke St Mary's. When he preached before Oliver Cromwell and his troops during the siege of Pembroke (1648) he so impressed the future Protector that he was invited aboard the men-of-war about to undertake the Irish campaign. During the Protectorate, Phillips became widely known as a committed advocate of the governments religious policy. A very accomplished orator, hailed by many as the best in the county, he preached in almost every Church English and Welsh, and before the Justices of the Assizes at Cardigan, Haverfordwest and Carmarthen. He must have relinquished his Pembroke incumbency when the parishes of Llangwn, Freystrop and Rosemarket were united (July 1656). On one occasion, the intrepid rector had an experience which convinced many of his admirers that Providence had a special affection for him. When riding homeward late at night, both he and his horse plunged into a deep coal-pit at Freystrop and were firmly wedged in the narrow mouth a few feet from the surface. He was rescued by the proprietor Captain Longmans, who had been appraised of his perilous predicament by an un-named deaf woman and her alert grandson.. Peregrine Phillips continued to be very active as an open-air preacher and public evangelist until soon after the restoration he fell foul of the Act of Uniformity (1662) which banned all acts of worship not conducted in accordance with the Book of Common Prayer. Ejected from the Established Church, this amiable but unrepentant non-conformist withdrew to Dredgeman Hill Farm which he held from Sir Herbert Perrot, of Haroldston, and which he converted into an Independent house Church (1665). Thereafter he became the accredited pastor of the Green Meeting, a non-conformist group of 50/60 which assembled in a little room on St Thomas 's Green and which was to develop into Albany Congregation (now United Reformed) Church Haverfordwest. Upon his death at 68 years of age in September 1692, this unforgettable former rector was buried near the pulpit at Haroldston Church.

1650 Steven Love a Londoner was appointed to the living of Cosheston as a result of the work of the Propagation Committee. He became a member of the Green Meeting in Haverfordwest. He later became minister St Thomas and St Mary's (1652) in Haverfordwest. (X ref this to the Haverfordwest plague history were he and his wife did so much work)

1690 Thomas Bowen of Cosheston refused to take the oath of allegiance.

Church in Wales MS AD/AET 1209 Pembrokeshire life 1572 1843

Cosheston, 2 miles (N.) from Pembroke, containing 678 inhabitants.

The village is beautifully situated on the Southern declivity of a Hill, the base of which is washed by an estuary of Milford Haven, navigable for barges. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of St.David's, rated in the King's Books at £ 11 12s 11d and in the patronage of Sir John Owen, Bart. The Church, dedicated to St.Michael, is an ancient structure in the early style of English architecture with a low tower surmounted by a spire.

The poor children of this parish are admissible into the National school at Pembroke. John Jones, esq., M. D., in 1698 bequeathed certain property for apprenticing poor children, and the relief of the aged and infirm, of the four parishes of Lawrenny, Cosheston, St Davids, and Lampeter-Velvrey, with a discretionary power to his brother, the Rev. Mr. Jones, as executor, to add other parishes: of the produce of this charity, Cosheston receives a sum amounting to about £30 per annum, which is appropriated agreeably to the directions of the testator. The average annual expenditure for the support of the poor amounts to £137. 15s

[There are many people whose names I would have liked to include from the time my father and mother had the Blue House Nursery – I will never forget them- they told me many stories- stories that had been handed down – old traditions – all which were of great help when I first started research. My thanks to all of them]

Education

1811 Acc /to the visitation records there was a schoolmaster in Cosheston

1847 Report on The State of Education in Wales

PARISH OF Cosheston,—on the 18th of December I visited the above parish. The only School at that time in it was a dame-school in Cosheston village. This school has been closed for the week previous on account of the severe weather. It was held in a room, part of a dwelling house. The furniture consisted of two square tables, which (the mistress told me) were exchanged when the scholars were in attendance, for benches, and four chairs. There was a bed in the room, which took up a great part of it. There had been another school in the parish at a place called Lawrenny Ferry, but it had been discontinued for a week; previous to the time of my visit. The master of this latter school was not considered to be in his right mind. Indeed, from what I saw of him, and the conversation I had with him, I should say that he was certainly very strange. He told me that his scholars had all deserted him lately and that he was looking out for a situation—what he would like to have was a situation as private tutor in a gentleman's family. He would be satisfied with 6s. per week and his board and lodgings. He said he could teach grammar right! well;" and when I asked him what he taught beside, the answer was "Oh, I teaches Latin, plane and spherical trigonometry, navigation and the Lunars."

There was one Dissenting Chapel, but no Sunday-school held in it.

The average of wages for labourers in this parish was 9s. per week on their own finding Such children as went to any school went to Pater

David Lewis,

I was favoured with the following letter by M. A. Roche, esq., which contains many remarks of great practical value:—

Paskiston, Pembroke, January 5, 1847

Sir

I am sorry not to have seen your Assistant when he visited this parish, I should like to have had with him some conversation. I must, therefore, take the liberty of troubling you with this letter.

Ten years ago, when my father came to reside in this Parish, where he possesses an estate and is the only resident landowner, I was anxious to get establish, at least, a Sunday-school; which was effected by the cooperation of others and of the family of the Rev. Mr. Holcombe the late rector. The population of this parish is under 600 souls; we average between 40 and 50 children between the ages of 5 and 16 years, principally between the ages of 7 and 14 years, at the school; the whole number of children between 5 and 16 years of age, in the parish being I should guess, about 70 or 80. The teachers at present are the Rev. Mr. Bowling the rector, Mrs. Bowling, another lady, and myself, besides a paid schoolmaster.

The fortune of the school has continued almost the same, though with a little variation. At first it was a novelty, then it was treated with indifference, but now I fancy in some instances I perceive the indifference wearing off. But still the parents seem to consider education—or, I should rather say, the mere prelude to education, such as reading and writing are—rather as an accomplishment, as a rich person would regard German or Italian, than as a necessary thing so that very little excuse is sufficient for their negligence in not sending their children and a very little affront sufficient for their withdrawing them. On one or two occasions, one has had to exert all one's influence and management to keep the affair together. The parent however are always very particular in sending their children neat and clean and want of shoes and clothes is the most fertile cause of occasional absence

I need scarcely say that during a couple of hours once a-week it is impossible to impart more than the merest pittance of knowledge. I have myself been most anxious to get my Pupils to understand what they Read and learn, and for that Purpose I have discarded all explanatory books, and use only the Bible and the Church Catechism, for I have never yet seen an explanatory book that, for such as Sunday-school children, did not require more explanation than what it professed to explain; and the consequence is, that the children learn by rote the explanation as well as the thing to be explained. Indeed, I have sometimes found that a viva voce explanation has been remembered by rote; and though the difficulty of making them understand is certainly not insuperable, yet it is much greater than anyone would suppose that had not had some years' experience in it. In fact, I am sure that this great difficulty forms a very great characteristic difference between the schools of the poor and of the rich. I have found much advantage in giving questions in writings to be answered in writings taking care that they shall be different for each child. I also have lately made some of them learn Watts's Hymns, which they do with great pleasure we do not teach writing

Besides our school, there is another Sunday Schools attached to a Dissenting Chapel; it is not, I understand, largely attended, and was, I believe, set up for the convenience of a few residents, about it, which is at the end of the parish. For I am most happy to say we are free from almost all, if not altogether all, religious animosity; we are not yet sufficiently enlightened for that.

Some few parents have managed to get their children taught to writes and there has been generally some day-school in the parish. At present there happen to be two, but the worst that I ever recollect. These schools are undertaken by persons for their livelihoods or to assist it by such scanty earnings. And this is a point which cannot be too much insisted on—the incapacity of the schoolmasters or schoolmistresses in this neighbourhood. Nothing will ever be effected until a complete change is made in these, but that will require far greater funds. A teacher never thinks of explaining anything; and though children are. sometime taught to read; yet they learn with so much carelessness that it is often on Sundays my chief employment to get my pupils out of the slovenly habits of pronunciation, omitting in reading all the little words, &c., acquired during the week.

I scarcely know whether our school is worth the trouble that I have imposed on you is reading this long letter; but so far as such a trifling institution can extend it has not been without benefit, were it only that by the attention of one of the lady-teachers some children have, by going there only, been taught to read very well, and I was anxious to attempt to afford you some notion of a little Welsh Sunday-school in an agricultural district, and the disposition entertained by the inhabitants towards being instructed, I have, &c.

M. A. Roche .

In 1863 a school was built in the village near the Church originally as a Church school. Today it is still used as a Primary School.

Shipbuilding

David Morgan a builder from Jeffeston who had build Laws St Pembroke Dock and his son-in-law, Thomas Howell who had been a shipwright at Neyland were partners at Whalcwm Cosheston in a thriving shipbuilding business in which they used oak trees growing on the banks of the Haven. - They built ships to order in their yard for Liverpool captains: and it was the custom for the captain who was to buy the ship to stay at Cosheston for some time before his ship was launched so that he could supervise final details. This business prospered until the coming of ironclad ships, when ships built of oak were gradually superseded.

Ships built	1860's	4 total 88 tons
	1880's	1 total 27 tons

The partners had another line of business at Cosheston a Chemical Works, primarily with the object of wasting none of the spare products from the Shipbuilding Yard. In time their most important product was naphtha and this with other compounds and charcoal, they sold, chiefly to Messrs.

Curtis and Sarvey, of Neath, manufacturers of explosives. Some bye products as well as oak bark went to the Tannery in Pembroke was built in 1837 and rebuilt in 1893 by architect K. McAlpin of Pembroke Dock. The later Chapel was built in the Simple Gothic style of the gable-entry type.

Thomas 's daughters Daisy, Lillian and Florence were writers as was their niece Avis Howells

The original Cresselly Primitive Methodist Chapel was built in Cresselly village in 1837. In 1893 the decision was to build a new Chapel on a new site at Lanesend , and the existing Chapel went out of use. By 2010 it was being used as an outbuilding.

The name Cresselly is doubtless related to "Christ's Well," but of the well we have no information. There used to be a "Christ's Well Chapel" near the water's edge.

Cresselly House

Cresselly House is a grade II listed Georgian country house in the small village of Cresselly, near Kilgetty, Pembrokeshire. It now also serves as a country house hotel and wedding venue.

The main range is rubble built in three storeys with two storey blocks on either side. It faces west looking down a valley towards the Cleddau Estuary.

Cresselly had belonged to the Bartlett family since 1564. It came into the Allen family in 1728 when John Allen (d. 1752), of Goodhooke, married Joan Bartlett, the daughter and heiress of John Bartlett of Cresselly. John Allen was appointed High Sheriff of Pembrokeshire in 1732. The estate lay on reserves of coal, which were mined to provide an income and exported from Cresswell Quay. The present house was built in 1769 by John Allen's son, Captain John Bartlett Allen, an army officer in the First Foot Guards, to replace an earlier building which was undesirably close to the coal mines. The estate descended in the male line down to Henry Seymour Allen (1847-1928) who died unmarried, when it passed to his nephew, Hugh Evelyn Allen (1880-1933). Hugh Evelyn's heir was his only daughter, Auriol Joan Bartlett Harrison-Allen. Her son, Hugh Harrison-Allen was the heir- at-law

It was built c.1770 for John Bartlett Allen, the wealthy owner of local coal mines, and recalls the work of principal architects of the period, e.g. Keck at Penrice (Gower). The first changes to the house were made in 1816-18 when the present staircase was built. Subsequent alterations are most notably the wings added in the 1860s; about the same time the park was remodelled and many estate buildings erected.

The c.1770 main block has a symmetrical, 3-storey, 5-bay coursed rubble front, the central three bays of which are advanced; freestone quoins, band courses and window dressings. Slightly set back to either side are 2-storey, 3-bay wings that relate to the 1860s enlargement and have uncoursed rubble elevations and simpler dressings; the porch is also of this period. The building has hipped slate roofs and tall stone chimney stacks; moulded eaves to the main block and wider boarded eaves to the wings. There are small-pane sash windows throughout; The porch has twinned pilasters and round-arched openings with dropped keystones to each side; the wings have splayed bays with dentilled cornices and balustraded parapets.

Notable features of the interior include the drawing-room, the finest room in the house, occupying the full width of the bay on the garden front. It has a finely executed Rococo plaster ceiling, the decoration of which includes an egg and dart cornice and a cartouche with musical trophies together with an open score. This room also retains a fine marble chimney-piece and has silk wall-hangings and panelling from the Edwardian period. The library has fine mahogany bookcases. RCAHMW

This is a largely nineteenth century estate in its present form. Some important park components remain. It otherwise preserves lawned gardens around the house and a walled kitchen garden from the earlier part of the century. There are also some fine entrances.

Parchmarks of levelled formal gardens, chiefly decorative beds, recorded in lawns fronting house during summer aerial reconnaissance in 2004. T Driver.

there is a square kitchen garden with S-facing conservatory on N wall and large frame or glasshouse immediately to its S with a much smaller one in S part of the garden.. All set in a wooded area of walks, with a circular feature to S of that, a little like a maze. . C.S.Briggs 20.10.05. RCAHMW, 24th August 2006.

Education in Wales (The Blue Book) 1847 Cresselley

Cresselley National School -

Parish of Jeffreyston

This school is conducted in a stone built slated school room erected in 1835, at an expense of £75, towards which the Committee of Council gave £42, and adjoining it is a house for the master, with two rooms on the ground and two on the first floor. There is a large garden in front and a coal house and outbuildings at the end farthest from the road leading from Narberth to Pembroke.

The furniture consists of one Masters desk, five desks for the scholars, one square table 12 benches, 20 boards of "reading Disentangled", one calculating board, one map of England, two boards for teaching forms and colours, 20 Scripture prints on boards, one paper clock for teaching time and a black board. The girls are taught needlework by the master's wife. Both she and her Husband spoke English well. The school is principally supported by Seymour Allen esq.. Of Cresselley. The scholars are colliers, labourers and (some few) farmer's children and pay 1d per week. The school is not so numerously attended now as it was some time ago (Mr Allen mentioned to me that, in his opinion it was necessary to the success of a school in Wales that the master should not only be trained but also a Welshman, otherwise he did not get on well with the people, this was the case at Jeffreyston)

The second chapter of St Matthew was read extremely well by several of the scholars who could also answer questions on mental arithmetic. The copy books were well written and kept clean.

Labourers wages on their own finding are from 1s 2d to 1s 4d, and with food 10d per day; carpenters and masons 2s 6d per day on their own finding ; farm servants age from 14 to 16, get £5, and those from 16 to 20 £8 per year; female servants from £3 to £5; many of both sexes in this parish attend the Church Sunday school. Most of the farmers can read and write and the generality of the Labourers are able to read the scriptures.

Cresswell Quay

Many a pint of beer I enjoyed in the tiny little pub here. In summer great to be able to sit outside but it was more fun if you sat in the crowded inside on the narrow bench in winter, watching the beer being drawn out of the barrel into a jug then poured into the pint glasses. No beer pumps just straight from the wood barrel. Only problem was the smell of cats. Which was worst the cats or the smell of wet wool cloths drying on a wet day when the bar was crowded. I miss it.

Creswell Quay (Christ's well) 1834

Acc to Topographical Dictionary of Wales S Lewis.

Cresswell Quay - a village situated at the point of junction of three parishes of Lawrenny, Carew and Jeffreston in the hundred of Narberth county of Pembroke 7 1/2 miles NE from Pembroke. The population is returned with the respective parishes.

It is situated on an estuary of Milford Haven and in each of the three parishes there is a small Quay for the convenience of shipping the coal and culm from the Mines with which this district abounds. From twenty to thirty thousand tons have been annually shipped from this place for exportation; but the quantity has recently much diminished and at present not more than six thousand tons are annually shipped generally in vessels of about eighty tons burden. [in the later version for 1839 it states that coal is no longer taken to Cresswell Quay but, by tramway, to the new Quays at Saundersfoot.]

Stepping Stones

A Ford crossing giving access to George Barlow's Quay and the dwelling Scotland. The Ford has been replaced by stepping stones which run for 50m across the Cresswell River, approximately 100m north of Cresswell Quay. RCAHMW

Pisgah Baptist Chapel was built in 1821, modified in 1841 and enlarged and refitted in 1877. This Chapel is built in the Simple round-headed style of the gable-entry type.

Mining Coal Quay colliery and coal fold

Cresswell Colliery – included the area from Cresswell River to Cresselly - many small mines, suspect some all trace lost, Owen records danger of flooding from old workings.

According to Coal, Culm and Cresswell Quay

The names of over fifty small but distinct coal pits or clusters of pits are recorded in the hinterland of Cresswell Quay in the period 1768 to 1828

Cresswell Quay identified as a shipping place for the first documented shipment of coal –from Pembrokeshire to Aberystwyth in 1282----- PRO c47/2/2/7

The Quays and “coal folds”, used to stock pile coal for separate mineral owners at Cresswell Quay are still in evidence today if you look.

Coal was transported from the long trenches but also some of what we would call today “open cast mines”, in between Cresswell Quay and Jeffreston, in ox carts and stored in the coal folds

Coal Culm and Cresswell Quay

In the early 1700's a "coal fold" was constructed at Cresswell located near to the shipping Quay. Due to the tides and water depth only the smaller craft suitable for coastal voyages and barges could be loaded there so the coal was transhipped to Lawrenny to be loaded into the larger vessels. The coal fold was in full use up until the early 1800's but the Topographical Dictionary of Wales of 1834 suggests that coal in the local area was becoming exhausted and certainly by 1839 one major source of coal for loading at Cresswell had installed a tramway to Saundersfoot.

Old Quay

Old Quay The small dock measuring 13m x 4m on its western side and the Quay itself measuring 28m., only its river frontage is still discernible on modern aerial photography. The Quay was linked by tracks to the ford, to the limekiln and to the main village.

Coal Fold

The coal fold associated with the old Quay is suggested by the stone walling around this enclosure. OS 1st edition 25in mapping shows the track leading along the foreshore westward to the Lawrenny Quays passing a small rectangular building in the south-east corner. The track turns north and then east to cross the Ford towards the lime kiln and coal pits .Approximately 1 acre in area, stone walls remaining (1989). An Old Coal Pit is shown on the first edition (1865) Ordnance Survey 25in mapping, some 120m to the west RCAHMW

Cresswell Castle Mansion Ruins

Ruins in dense vegetation of rectangular building 30ft by 40 ft, possibly 16th century. round turret at each corner possibly of 13th century origins.

Castle like structure probably the home of Barlows – said the have medieval tiles

There are traces of a fine porch and doorway midway in the eastern front, and of a short broad walk to the banks of the Cresswell River, a tributary of the Cleddau, which runs past the house and is tide-able to this point.

Beyond the north wall stretched the garden, an almost square enclosure with a pleasant river frontage. In the corner outside the north-west tower of the residence is a spring which first rose into a well, and by its overflow supplied a fish pond in the centre of the enclosure. The stables and out-buildings appear to have been placed against the east wall of the house.

The Chapel. About 300 yards west of the mansion stand the ruins of a small domestic Chapel. The building forms a rectangle 20 feet by 10 feet. The doorway is in the north wall, and a few feet to the south is the only remaining window a single light under a plain straight-pointed arch. The south wall seems to have had no window-spaces.

Across the Church beneath the western wall runs stone bench. The east wall collapsed in 1921; the others stand to the height of about 10 feet. In the north-east corner is a small cupboard or aumbry. NOTE.— in the 17th century the then representative of the Barlow family forsook Cresswell for the neighbouring mansion of Lawrenny, the former being left to go to ruin.

The Chapel is called Christ's Well in the crown conveyance to Thomas and Roger Barlow and it is probable that the edifice was first erected upon the site as the Chapel of the well already mentioned. There would doubtless also be provided a house for the attendant priest; this probably gave way to a Tudor mansion.

Castle Gardens. Castle-like structure, probable home of Barlows, said to have produced medieval tiles. remarkably like Ruperra, and reminiscent of the towered formal gardens. Garden 'stretched beyond the north wall [Castle], an almost square enclosure with a pleasant river frontage.

This garden is depicted on the Second Edition Ordnance Survey 25-inch map of Pembrokeshire XXXIV, sheet 12 (1907). C.H. Nicholas, RCAHMW, 25th August 2006.

dwelling with gardens to its river frontage and to the east The house is orientated east-west and measures 12m x 5m with an extension to its western end. On second edition mapping conifers have been planted within the enclosure on the northern side of the house. The dwelling's gardens abutt to the coal fold serving George Barlow's Quay . Modern aerial photography shows the wall which once bounded both the coal fold and part of the gardens. The site of dwelling is under heavy tree cover and hence likely to no longer be extant. RCAHMW

RCAM Bean Close Earthwork

A previously unnoticed earthwork not marked on the 6 in. Ord. sheet stands on a field known as the "Bean Close," distant about 500 yards north Cresswell ruins (It is roughly circular, about 830 feet in circumference. The enclosing rampart, which is much decayed, is at its best on the south, where it rises 3 feet and falls 6 feet to a ditch now considerably silted up. The entry was to the east, and had probably a width of 10 feet to 15 feet. The earthwork is overlooked, and the enclosure may have been of agricultural rather than of military purpose.

1849 Acc/to Topographical Dictionary of Wales - S Lewis.

Crinow, a parish, in the union of Narberth, hundred of Dungledy, county of Pembroke, SouthWales, 1 mile (East.) from Narberth; containing 53 inhabitants.

This parish, though in the hundred of Dungledy, is almost entirely surrounded by that of Narberth: and, with the exception of a very small portion, belongs to the daughters and co-heiresses of the late Roger Eaton, esq., whose elegant mansion of Park Glas is situated within its limits.

The living is a rectory not in charge, endowed with £600 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Lord Chancellor; net income, £79: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £49. 16., and there is a glebe of one acre, valued at £3 per annum. The Church is a very small edifice, without tower or spire; but of late years it has been repaired and beautified, and rendered one of the neatest churches in the county. A Sunday school is supported by Miss Eaton.

The Rev D Jones, Rector of Crinow , informed me that labourers wages with food are 8d per day – without 1s to 1s 2d; carpenters and masons on their own finding 2s.; farm servants £4 to £12 a year and some £16.; female servants £3 to £7 There is no gratuitous education for the poor in Crinow, but it is not too far for them to attend the school at Llandewi Velfrey. Only eight children are in the parish, and none of them are more than 1 ½ miles from Llandewi. The people are very steady, industrious, and sober. Many farmers are destitute of education. There are several schools in the adjoining parishes for children to get gratuitous education, but many are too poor to supply their children with proper clothing. The wages are the same at Llandewi Velfrey and at Crinow. 7th

Green Castle or Clun Pattel Mound

This mound, situated on the farm of Clun Pattel, is locally known as Green Castle, but it seems to be in a map but appears on the modern sheets though without a name. The Tithe Schedule gives the name of the field within which the mound is placed as Castle Meadow; and this, together with the marked resemblance of the hillock to the usual military mounds of the county, dispels all doubts as to its original purpose. The mound has a base circumference of 360 ft. Its height is 15 ft.; the diameter of the flat summit is 30ft. Slight traces of a moat remain, but there are no signs of a Bailey. The mound is within 50 yards of the parish Church – Visited 21st May 1915.

Ffynnon Deilo

This is a well-known spring rising in the field which lies directly south of Llwyn Gwathan (? Gwaeddau) farmstead, the field being styled Ffynnon Deilo in the Tithe Schedule. The water of the spring flows into a roughly constructed well hardly large enough for immersion. Traditions of its healing powers are still current in the district, and a number of place names testify to the former popularity of the spring – Visited 1st July 1915

The site of the well is on the boundary line between this parish and that of Llanbedr Velfrey, but it is reckoned to belong to Crinow.

Parc Glas, Crinow

Early 19th century small Late Georgian country house with 18th century origins: 2 storey and cellar, 5-window façade: whitewashed render on rubble and a hipped slate roof with plain eaves. 12-pane sash windows to the 1st floor with plain reveals and slate sills. Similar windows to the ground floor which flank a central stone Doric portico with flat entablature and moulded cornice on fluted columns. A round arched entrance with segmental fanlight, panelled reveals and half-glazed panelled door. The interior consists of a screen of four Ionic columns supporting full entablature to drawing room, cornice with oak leaf and acorn motif to the library and a large oval staircase Hall

Cronware/Crunwere/Crunwear

Unfortunately the Church building has now become unsafe and had to be closed. I understand that it is now described by CADW as ruinous

NOTE: This Parish has always been a mystery to me. The ancient Church is set two fields away from the road and although I took time on several Sundays to look round the fields I could find no evidence of the remains of any buildings.

I visited several times to take Services and I asked some of the congregation but could not get an explanation. One told me that the people who lived near the Church had all died in the plague of the 1660s but I could find no evidence of that. I was also told that the Church had been attached to a Grange of the Monastery at Pembroke, yes, there is a very strong connection with Pembroke Priory but I could not find any evidence of a Grange. Several times we would have a discussion after the Service at which suggestions were made and I would like to thank all the congregation for the warm welcome they always gave me as well as the help and encouragement in my research. 1869 August 20 Notes Glynne, Arch. Camb., 1888,

This Church has been much modernised, it of cruciform plan, with north and south transeptal Chapels, but the tower is at the west end. The tower remains untouched, and is of the rude quasi military character, has embattled parapet and corbel-table, without string-course or buttresses; all the openings are merely plain slits. The central battlement on the west side is long, but not on the others. The west door modern, Much of the outer wall seems to have been rebuilt, and with quoins at the corners, and the windows are of doubtful character, of two lights, under a pointed arch, and no tracery. The north wall has more of an original aspect. The arches opening to the chancel and transept are pointed and quite plain. The interior is dreary, kept clean, but pewed. On the north of the chancel is a pointed arch in the wall.

Crunwear, Crunwere or Cronwere, dedicated to St Elidyr. Restored in 1878 at a cost of £550. Architect, Mr T David, Langharne. west door then closed up, and original entrance from the south side again made use of. The Pointed arch on the north of the chancel no longer exists, as a new vestry was built at the last restoration. The insertion of four additional windows has much improved the lighting of the interior. No longer pewed, but seated.

1915 Acc. To The RCAM The Parish Church St. Elidyr:

The Church consists of nave (32 feet by 18 feet), chancel (15 ½ feet by 12 feet), north transept (14 feet by 11 ½ feet), south transept (14 feet by 11 ½ feet), and western tower' (17 ½ feet north and south by 16 ½ feet east and west). It was rebuilt in 1843, and subsequently restored (1878), with the exception of the tower and north transept. The tower is of the regular Pembrokeshire type; it is of three storeys, the lowest having a plain vault. It is lighted with narrow loops. The west door is blocked; the window above is modern. The font is modern.-Visited, 20th May, 1915.

Note.-The Church is included as a Telio foundation in the early list of churches claimed by the see of Llandaf~ under the name Lann Cronnguern (Book of Llan Dav, 255), and the proper form of the parish name is doubtless Cronwern. The episcopal register for 1486 (ed. Hon. Society of Cymmrodorion) terms it the parish Church of St. Teliou (misprinted Telion).

Only the vaulted tower with a NE stair turret and a blocked west doorway and the north transept of this 13c cruciform Church have survived unrebuilt.

According to RCAHMW

St Elidyr's Church was reconstructed in 1843 and restored in 1878. It has medieval fabric at the base of the nave walls and parts of the south transeptal Chapel, while the tower is probably 16th or 17th century. The tower is of the regular Pembrokeshire type and is of three storeys, lighted with narrow loops. The Church is no longer in use..

RCAHMW/F.Foster 25.03.2009

An isolated Church approached across a field. The Church occupies a sloping site with the tower at the uphill end. There are cracks in the tower and the Church has been closed as a dangerous structure. The Church is now (2011) becoming derelict. According to the Pevsner for Pembrokeshire the medieval Church was replaced in 1847 by the present cruciform Church designed by Thomas Jones of Haverfordwest. The low W. tower was retained. The lower stage is battered to a string course and vaulted; the top stage is corbelled and crenellated. The 1878 restoration introduced some distinctive detailing. The raised quoins appear to belong to this phase. The repetitive circular motif in cement over the porch doorway is notably vernacular and appears to have been made using a cog-wheel as a mould. (R.F. Suggett/RCAHMW/July 2011).

Henry IV restored the priory but it was seized again by the Crown

Henry IV issued a writ of protection to Pembroke Priory (Episc Acts pp247,254 ,255)

Henry by the Grace of God King. etc. to all whom the present letters shall come, greeting. Know that we inwardly considering how some alien priories, houses and religious places being within our realm of England and Wales were laudably founded and built by our noble progenitors and other nobles and magnates of our realm to do and maintain divine offices and works of hospitality and alms and other works of piety and devotion, and that the same priories and religious places, as well by sudden and frequent removals and expulsions of the priors and occupiers of the places aforesaid as by divers secular and other farmers after they were that they were first taken into the hand of Sir Edward, late King of England, our grandfather (Edward III), by occasion of the war between us and those of France, are so above measure destroyed, dilapidated and wasted as well in houses as in things and possessions that the divine worship and regular observances therein are at an end, and hospitalities and alms and other works of charity besides, of old established and accustomed to be done there are withdrawn, and also the pious vows of the founders are in manifold ways defrauded and frustrated to no small offence and displeasure of Almighty God, as we believe. And it being our will therefore to the glory of God and holy Church to provide more graciously for the increase of divine worship and the renewal and continuance of the said works of charity and other works incumbent, we of our especial Grace, of our certain knowledge and with the assent of our council in our present parliament have granted and by the tenour of these presents have restored to the abbot and convent of St Martin, Sees of the power of France, the advowsons of all their conventual and other priories to which priors have been accustomed of ancient time to be admitted, instituted and inducted, in our realm of England and elsewhere within our lordship and power being, and taken and seized into our hand by occasion of the war aforesaid, and we remove our hand from the advowsons aforesaid; to have and to hold to them and their successors, so that the same abbot and his successors aforesaid shall henceforth present fit persons to the priories aforesaid in all avoidance of the same, the seisin thereof aforesaid or any other seisin in our hand or the hand of our aforesaid grandfather or of Richard, late King of England, by the occasion of the war aforesaid, made before these times, or any ordinances published to the contrary, notwithstanding; saving nevertheless to us and our heirs and other chief lords the services due therefrom, and further saving the right of any other person whatsoever. In witness etc. we have caused these our letters patent to be made. Witness myself at Westminster, 15th November in the first year of our reign (1399) By K.

Also on 12 June, in the year above, at London the Bishop authorised an exchange between Sirs James Vynor, then rector of the parish Church of Freystrop, and Thomas Broun, then rector of Cronwer, of his diocese, and the causes of such exchange having been found lawful and approved and their resignations because of the said exchange of the benefices mentioned having been duly made by Sir Richard Jordan, priest, of the said diocese of St Davids Proctor of the aforesaid Sir James Vynor etc., as well as by the aforesaid Thomas Broun, then present there in person, and admitted by the Bishop himself, the same Bishop admitted the aforesaid Sir Thomas Broun to the aforesaid Church of Freystrop at the presentation of the prior and convent of Pylle of the order of St Benedict of Tiron, patrons of the said Church etc., and subsequently on the same day and at the same place, the aforesaid Bishop admitted the aforesaid Sir James Vynor in the person of his Proctor aforesaid etc., to the Church of Cronwer aforesaid at the presentation of Sir Henry, King of England, etc., and vice-patron by reason of the temporalities of the priory of St Nicholas, Pembroke, being in his hand on account of the war between him and his French adversaries, patron of the same Church; and instituted him as rector, etc.

The Alien priory's of which Pembroke Priory was one were seized by the Crown in 1414 by Henry 5th who apportioned some out to relatives others were used to endow the foundation of Eton and Cambridge – Archbishop Chicheley also benefited.

It is believed that soon after Humphrey duke of Gloucester acquired the estates he apportioned some to the abbey of St Albans

They gave some of this to other religious establishments – which is how St Mary's Tenby came to belong to a convent run as a brothel

1433 8th July Westminster Patent Roll 11 Henry VI m.1.pt 2 (Cal pp298-299)

On 3 September, in his first year, (1413) Henry V granted to the present King's Uncle, Humphrey duke of Gloucester, by the name of Humphrey de Lancastre, the alien priory of Pembroke in tail during the war with France; and by other letters patent, dated at Leicester 16th May in the second year, he advanced him to be earl of Pembroke and then duke of Gloucester for his life, with £20 a year to support his estate as earl and £40 a year to support his estate as duke, out of the issues of the county of Pembroke by the hands of the sheriff.

Afterwards on 21 May in the eighth year, peace was made between the King and Charles, King of France, whereby and by virtue of an ordinance made in Parliament at Leicester, in 2 Henry V, the said alien priory of Pembroke, not being conventual and not having had any priors instituted or inducted would come into the King's hands. Now the said Humphrey has had no payment of the said sums of £20 and £40 or of any parcel thereof because Henry V had no issues by the hands of the sheriff of the county inasmuch as by letters patent dated 20th July in his first year, he granted to the said Humphrey in tail, amongst other things, the said county with all its issues and profits by the name of Castle and lordship of Pembroke... with all franchises, regalities, liberties, fines ransoms, customs, knight's fees advowsons, fisheries, prises of wine and other profits accustomed. The King therefore, on surrender of the above named letter patent relative to the titles of earl and duke and to the said priory, by advice and assent of the lords spiritual and temporal and of the commonality of England in the present parliament grants to his said uncle, in tail male, the said styles, honours and names of earl of Pembroke and duke of Gloucester, with £20 a year to maintain his estate as earl and £40 a year to maintain his estate as duke, from the said 16 May 2 Henry V out of the issues and revenues of the said priory of Pembroke, Grant to him also during pleasure the said priory with all lands, tenements, rents services, possessions, pensions, portions, fees, advowsons, franchises, liberties and other profits to the same belonging, he finding four chaplains to celebrate divine service everyday in the said priory and paying to Hortonk van Clux, "chivaler", the £50 a year granted to him by Henry IV, henceforward and as from the aforesaid 21 May By K and C in Parl.

Topographical Dictionary of Wales S Lewis Crunwere 1834

Cronwere (Crunwear), a parish, in the union and hundred of Narberth, county of Pembroke, South Wales, 5 miles (E. S. E.) from Narberth; containing 282 inhabitants. This parish is situated on the eastern confines of the county, a short distance south of the turnpike-road from Laugharne to Narberth. It is bounded on the north by Lampeter, on the south by Amroath, on the west by Lud- Church, and on the east by Carmarthenshire, from which it is separated by a small brook. The number of acres is about 2000, of which 1500 are arable and 500 pasture. The surface is of a hilly character: the soil is various; red earth, affording rich pasture, extends across a portion of the parish in a direction from north to south; other parts are cold and sterile, with a subsoil of clay; the earth cover- ing the limestone portion is good, but liable to become soon parched and dry. There is a village named Lanteague, the only one in the parish; also a corn-mill, and a mill where the coarse cloth of the country is prepared and dyed: a quarry is likewise worked, producing limestone of fine quality. The living is a discharged rectory, rated in the King's Books at £6. 16. 10½., and in the patronage of the Lord Chancellor: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £105; there is a glebe- house, and the glebe contains sixty-eight acres, valued at £50 per annum. The Church, dedicated to St. Elidyr, is a very ancient structure, now nearly in ruins, and contains 200 sittings. A Sunday school was established in the year 1820

The Rev W D Phillips, Vicar, informed me that the labourers wages with food are from 9d to 10d per day ; without food 1s and 1s 3d in Winter. Farm servants £5 to £9 and female servants £3 to £7 per year. Masons and Carpenters 1s 10d to 2s on their own provisions and 1s 2d with food. There is no gratuitous education of any kind on weekdays in the parish, many parents send their children to schools at Tavenspate and Amroth. The children have to learn the Church Catechism; it is compulsory at the former; but most children learn it at the latter. Generally speaking, the people are remarkable for their good character. The wealthier class of farmers only are well educated; the smaller farmers are very illiterate and cannot afford to give their children any education.

Crymych,

Situated at the crossroads of the old Prehistoric Ridgeway track from Prescelly to St Davids and the A478, the old turnpike road from Tenby to Cardigan.

Pembrokeshire Coast National Park by Dillwyn Miles.

Standing where 6 roads meet, Crymych is the centre of a large agricultural area. Its growth as a village began when the Whitland and Taf Valle Railway arrived in 1875, on its way to Cardigan. The road from Cardigan to Tenby here crosses the prehistoric Ridgeway that runs the length of the Presely Hills.

Sites of interest

1 1/2 miles west - Foeldrygarn Hillfort 157336

This is a large Iron Age Hill fort of about 4.5 hectares made up of three contiguous enclosures. Each enclosure is defended by a single unditched rampart of stone and earth. The main entrance to the complex can be seen in the west, and there are also entrances in the south and east. Inside the fort are the remains of at least 220 hut platforms, some of which can be seen clearly as pock-marked depressions. Some of these huts were excavated by the Rev Baring-Gould in 1899, which provided evidence to show that the fort was occupied during times as well as in the Iron age. Finds from the excavations are in Tenby Museum. Within the inner enclosure are the remains of three large cairns. These are burial mounds of possible Bronze age date.

Carn Alw Hillfort 2 1/2 miles west of Crymych.

Cwm-yr-Eglwys see also Dinas.

Ruined Church

According to legend it is believed that St Brynach founded the original Church here 6c.

In 1849 The Church, was described as dedicated to St. Brynach, occupies a remarkable situation on the beach, and at spring tides the walls of the churchyard are washed by the sea.

Dale,

Dale

The Dale Peninsula has a long history with a flint factory -yet flint is not a native stone of the region, and other prehistoric remains although many sites have been destroyed by farming. One quite recently when a standing stone was removed and investigation suggested that the site dated from over 1000 BC. Every headland seems to have been fortified with bank and ditch. More recent fortifications were built to defend the Haven and in World War Two airfields to defend our shipping. It is an area which is very windswept with the strong gales from the west and the villages are small. During the 1800's many inhabitants left, the Ormonds, Mormans from Marloes migrated to Salt Lake City. The Hawgoods from Dale and Marloes to Pembroke Dock to work in the dockyard, after, some of the family to America.

It is also an area where there is a change in Church architecture from the fortified tower churches of South Pembrokeshire to the plain towerless churches of the north part of this area.

More recently it has become an area more dependent on the tourist trade

[Nowadays the Dale Yacht Club organizes sailing races Throughout the summer with a regatta during August. Dale Sailing Company provides a chandlery service and much else besides.

The beach is stony rather than sandy, and that there is a lack of car-parking space.

Dale Castle is modern rather than ancient and is not open to the public. Much more interesting is Dale Fort, one of the Victorian defences of Milford Haven, well preserved and used as a field study centre.]

South Pembrokeshire Place Names by P. V. Harris

Old English doel or old Norse dal-r, probably "deep low place" but the name appears on to have been Valle , Old French. 1293 Robert de Valle received a grant of a weekly Market and annual Fair at his manor of Valle .

1595 George Owen's Description of Milford Haven,

It formed an important landmark for Mariners:

"[Mariners] ayme their course till they see St. Annes Chappel being an ould chappel decayed having a rounde towre builded like a windmyllne or pigeon howse of stonne, as I esteerne yt xxti foote highe the towre and chappel standeth soe mounted that it is seene first of any land markes, and by this they knowe where to finde the entrance into the harborowe [Milford Haven] for it standeth within three flight shootes west of the havons mouth. - Owen's Pem. Pt. II., p. 55X".

1811 Fenton Dale

Dale, where what is called the Castle, though now retaining nothing or very little of a castellated appearance, a handsome mansion belonging to John Lloyd of Mabus in Cardiganshire esq.. by marriage with Miss Allen, the heiress of this house, together with the Church, a neat building close to it has no bad effect when viewed from the west end of the dingle in which it stands, backed by a fine reach of the Haven here much expanded and branching out into numerous creeks. Modern Dale appears to have but little trade, most of the houses being ruinous and deserted, yet in the time of De Valle , the ancient Lord of the place, where he resided in his Castle, it had the title of a borough, had a Market and other privileges. Of the bay and roadstead of Dale I shall give the opinion of George Owen out of a MS account addressed to the Earl of "Pembroke" in the year 1596 and of Lewis Morris in 1748

1595 George Owen said of it

“Dale rode is a goodlye bay and a faire rode of great receipt, and one of the best rodes and bays of all Milforde, and best defended from all windes, the east and southeast excepted; in all this rode there is good landing at all times”

1748 Lewis Morris, who was a skilful surveyor, speaking of it with reference to the improved state of navigation and size of vessels in his time, only says “This is a ready outlet for small vessels, where they may tide in two of three fathoms at low water. The pier which now lies in ruins would be very useful to trade if repaired.

Near this place the earl of Richmond, afterwards Henry the Seventh landed with great reinforcements from France, and was here joined by Sir Rhys ap Thomas and many of the principal men of this country, who accompanied him to Bosworth field and to whose assistance and support he chiefly owed the acquisition of the crown of England, and epoch marked by a singular awful visitation from Heaven, in the minor plague distinguished by the name of sweating sickness which was supposed to be introduced with Henry's foreign Levies to Milford.

Henry, in gratitude to Heaven for his safe arrival at Milford is said to have built a Chapel on or near the spot where he landed, but of which no trace remains, or account to direct you to its site Proceed along the coast to the two new lighthouses on St Anne's Point (Here formerly stood a Chapel on the ruins of which one of the old lighthouses was built – George Owen 1595 represents it as “owld and decayed having a rownd towre like a windmyll or pigion-howse of stone twenty foote high” built to supersede the old whose light was derived from coal, on the improved principle with Argand lanps and opened for use the 20th June 1800. The low light house on the extremity of St Anne's head is 15ft high and the lantern elevated 160ft above the level of the sea and exhibits a strong continued light from the island of Skomer, in a north direction round to Seaward and up the harbour as far as Hubberston. The high lighthouse is 42ft high and elevated 195ft above the level of the sea and bears from the low light north by west $\frac{3}{4}$ west by compass and is distant from the low light 203yds.

1849 Topographical Dictionary of Wales - S Lewis.

Dale, a village and parish, in the union of Haverfordwest, hundred of Rhôs, county of Pembroke, South Wales, 13 miles (S. W. by W.) from Haverfordwest; containing 392 inhabitants. This village is supposed to have derived its name from a contraction of De Valle, the name of one of its ancient lords, in whose time it was dignified with the title of a borough, and appears to have enjoyed certain immunities. It still preserves the right of pasturing cattle on a plot of ground, called Dale Meadow, after the Lord of the manor has cleared off the Hay, which privilege was granted to the holders of burgage tenements by Henry VII., who, when Earl of Richmond, landed at this place, on his expedition to wrest the crown of England from Richard III. Here he was met by Rhys ab Thomas, who advanced from Carew Castle with a well-disciplined and well-appointed band of followers, to join the standard of the earl, with whom he was present at Bosworth Field, and to whose success he materially contributed, not only by his influence in adding to the number of Henry's partisans, but by his valour and discretion in the field.

Dale is situated on a little bay forming one side of the entrance into Milford Haven, and affording, in Dale roads, good anchorage for small vessels, which may ride in safety in two or three fathoms at low water. block-houses were built here in the reign of Elizabeth, and a chain is said to have been drawn across the mouth of the Haven, from St. Anne's here to Angle Point on the opposite side, to obstruct the passage of the Spanish Armada. St. Anne's lighthouses were originally erected in 1712, by William Allen, esq., to whom a lease was granted by the crown for ninety-nine years, which term expired in 1813: they were rebuilt and again opened in 1800. The lantern of one of them contains eleven lights, and has an elevation of 160 feet; that of the other has sixteen lights, at an elevation of 195 feet.

[Mining]

Copper-ore was formerly worked in the parish.

A fishery is carried on, employing six boats, chiefly in taking lobsters, oysters, and herrings, during their respective seasons; and there is a small trade in the importation of coal and culm from the interior of the county. The parishioners at large have the right of pasturing cattle on Pickleridge common.

The scenery is of a bold and striking character; and from the higher grounds are obtained some extensive and pleasing views over St. George's Channel to the south and east, and of the adjacent country to the north. Dale Castle, formerly the mansion of the Allens, passed by marriage with the heiress to John Lloyd, esq., of Mabus, in the county of Cardigan, and is now the property of his grandson, John P. Lloyd Allen Phillips, esq. It is an embattled structure, and has been modernised and greatly improved by the addition of two spacious wings, communicating with the centre by two circular projecting towers; the edifice now forms one of the finest castellated mansions in the county, and, from its situation, is a prominent and interesting object in the scenery of the place. The living is a perpetual curacy, endowed with £800 royal bounty; net income, £65; patron and impropiator, Mr. Phillips. The Church, dedicated to St. James, and rebuilt in 1761 at the sole expense of John Allen, esq., is a neat edifice, consisting of a nave and chancel, and containing an elegant font of marble, presented to the parish by the same gentleman. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists, and a Sunday school is held in the Church. along the cliffs by which this part of the coast is bounded, are remains of several ancient encampments, apparently of Danish construction.

1895 Dale -- Nooks And Corners Of Pembrokeshire Timmins

Making our way to the farm called Little Marloes, we push on through heathy byways, approaching the coast again at west Dale Bay. Now we catch a glimpse of Dale Castle, with the village of that ilk nestling under the lee of a dark wood, and harvest-fields crowning the sunny hillside, while a silvery stretch of the Haven lies in the background.

Dale Castle appears to have been a place of some importance from very early times, though of its history we have but meagre records. In the year 1293 Robertus de Valle granted a charter for a weekly Market at his manor-house of Valle, and here Sir Rhys ap Thomas entertained his future King after his landing at Mill Bay upon the adjacent coast.

This village of Dale is still a comely-looking spot, where the pleasant country residences of the gentlefolk rub shoulders with a sprinkling of homely cottages ; yet withal the village has a certain air about it as of a place that has known better days. For Dale, it seems, was once a flourishing seaport, the abode of substantial sea captains and well-to-do Merchant traders ; while, if tales be true, the village folk drove a flourishing business in the contraband goods run in by the ' free trade ' fraternity. In those days good Welsh ale was brewed at Dale by a family bearing the singular name of Runawae, who exported it in large quantities to Liverpool : hence Dale Street in that city is said to derive its title from this place.

We approach the village by a footpath, and pass betwixt the Castle and the Church. The fuchsias, hydrangeas, myrtle and laurustinas that brighten this little God's acre tell of a genial climate ; yet some of the headstones bear grim records of shipwrecked mariners, who lost their lives upon the iron-bound coast that shelters this favoured spot. Dale Church has a tall, unrestored tower, and possesses a slender silver chalice inscribed with the words ' Poculum Ecclesia; de Dale, 1577.'

The lane now runs below the luxuriant groves of Dale Hill, and then skirts the shores of the sheltered inlet called Dale road. ' Dale Rode,' says George Owen, ' is a goodlye Baye and a fayre rode of great receipte ; one of the best Rodes and Bayes of al Milforde and best defended from al windes, the East and South East excepted. In all this Rode there is good landing at al times.' Close beside the water stands a humble alehouse called the Brig, which bears evident traces of its smuggler patrons, being literally honey-combed with cellars and secret cupboards for the storage of their booty. Even now the walls still reek with moisture, from the salt stored away in inaccessible corners during those piping times when that commodity was worth a couple of guineas the hundredweight.

We now direct our steps towards St. Anne's Head, in order to visit Mill Bay, the traditional landing-place of Henry of Richmond. "Here in Pembrokeshire,' says old George Owen, ' happened his landinge and first footeinge when he came to enjoie the Crowne and to confounde the parricide and bluddie tyrante Richard iii. Here founde he the heartes and hands first of all this lande readye to ayde and assist him". The saying goes that as he rushed up the steep bank at the head of his troop Henry, being scant of breath, exclaimed, "This is Brunt !" a name that has clung to the neighbouring farm ever since.

1905 According to G. Mason Pembroke Dock: Royal Dockyard and neighbourhood

On the occasion of a villagers marriage at Dale, which took place shortly after the Wreck, (of a ship laden with Whisky at Angle just across the Haven) a yacht laden with a visiting party from Pembroke Dock, fired a salute from two Cannon on board, which, by the way, disturbing all the crows in the Rurig woods - not a few - which added interest to the event of the happy couple and procession returning from the Church.

The visitors from the yacht were duly invited to partake of supper on shore and on sitting down to a well-crowded table each visitor faced a bottle of whisky - manufactured on the premises no doubt.

1913 South Wales by Wade.

Near the entrance of Miford Haven 10 mls SW of Haverfordwest. It was here, at Mill Bay, 2mls to the S. that Henry Tudor, afterwards Heny VII, landed in 1485. Dale Castle is a modern residence incorporating part of an earlier fortress. At St Anne's head is a lighthouse and there are two others at Great Castle Head. now a sailing centre located inside the entrance to Milford Haven. Dale was much larger in the middle ages and 600 people died here of plague in the 1600's

1920 Lighthouse RCAM

According to local tradition the High Lighthouse occupies the site of a Chapel dedicated to St Ann. Fenton (tours 167) says

" Here formerly stood a Chapel on the ruins of which one of the old light houses was built.

George Owen, in Queen Elizabeth's time represents it as "owlde and decayed having a round towre like a windmylle or pigion house of stone twenty foote high"

An interesting sketch by Mr Charles Norris made about the year 1800, shows the old lighthouse, in itself a highly curious structure, that probably represents a building which may have been directly associated in medieval times with a Chapel whose particular function was to provide a beacon light to mariners when running for Milford Haven.

It will be noticed that against the western wall of the tower are indications of the roof line of a building that had been attached to it, and a round headed doorway which gave access from this building to the tower. There is at present no part of the tower standing, and but few traces of any structure having occupied the site;- Visited 30th September 1920

1956 According to South Wales - H L V Fletcher

Once a medieval town and thriving trading and shipbuilding centre. In the 18c had 18 inns and a town Hall but they were covered by the sea. Dale Castle hardly built in a strategic position in 13c property of the de Vales descendants of a knight who had accompanied Martin de Tours on his invasion of North Pembrokeshire. Ancestor had accompanied Stongbow Earl of Pembroke in the invasion of Ireland.

Subsequent owner was the Walter family of Roch and Rosemarket from whom Lucy Walter was descended - she was the mistress of wife of Charles II and mother of the unfortunate Duke of Monmouth.

Dale Fort - The western blockhouse.

According to Victorian Forts

A work (battery) was recommended for Dale Point since 1829 but nothing was done until General Sir John Burgoyne reiterated the need for such a work in 1850. During the 1850s the battery was constructed, no definite dates can be given as official records are silent but it had been completed by 1858. The battery was originally proposed to prevent an enemy making use of the anchorage at the mouth of the Haven.

In 1858 the main battery was criticised as being too close to the rock face behind it rendering it potentially untenable during a bombardment; perhaps the criticism stuck as in 1871 it was proposed that the battery at Dale Point be abandoned and its armament and stores withdrawn. In 1876 it was proposed that; a few heavy guns should be placed at Dale Point Battery to co-operate with Thorne Island and the Battery at Dale Point be remodelled to receive them. This was not carried out.

The Fort was the test site for the Zalinski Dynamite gun during 1890s in the event the gun was not adopted as technology had overtaken it. There were plans for a Brennan Torpedo establishment and a battery of 6-inch guns however nothing came of these either. The War Office sold the Fort in 1902 to Lieutenant-Colonel Own-Evans (RE) who converted it into a private residence for himself and his family; he died in 1925 and the Fort was bought by a Miss Bland (later Mrs. Lee-Roberts).

During the Second World War the Admiralty requisitioned the Fort for use as a de-gaussing and mine watching station. The Fort was returned to Mrs. Lee-Roberts by the Admiralty in 1946, she sold the Fort the next year to the forerunners of the Field Studies Council.

The Fort is situated at the end of the Dale peninsula and is cut off from it by a ditch that reaches down to the shoreline on either side of the peninsula. The ditch is covered by a tiered loophole wall which at its highest point forms a plateau where a battery shaped like a Tudor bulwark, with embrasures for three guns projects out into the ditch covering it on both sides. Inside the Fort are separate soldiers and officers barracks stores and magazine; the gun battery is at the eastern end of the site, and is tiered in that the first four guns are at a slightly lower level than the last three, all fired en barbette; originally there was a small magazine behind the four gun battery but this has gone. Alterations over the years have been made, notably an accommodation block has been built on top of the main magazine. The Dynamite gun position survives outside the dining area together with the underground chamber.

The Parish Church Dedicated to St James - Royal Commission of Ancient Monuments.

This Church has seen several restorations, in the course of which all features of antiquarian interest, which it may have contained, were removed. On plan it consists of nave, chancel, and western tower; the latter is the only part that retains any appearance of antiquity. It is almost square 14 ½ ft by 13 ½ ft; the ground storey is vaulted. The tower windows are small single lights with trefoil heads of the 15th century date. The entrance to the tower is from the north. The font and stone altar table were brought here from Italy in 1818 – Visited 21st September, 1920

Dale St James: The west tower is 15c. The nave and chancel south walls and their windows are Victorian but the battered east and north walls are medieval. —

Dale Castle - Tony Roberts 1989.

Dale Castle is a private house just north of the village. It is not open to the public, although one has a good view of it from the road. Parts of a much earlier Castle are incorporated in the present house. Though hardly built in strategic position, the Castle was in the 13th century the property of the de Vales, descendants of a knight who had accompanied Martin de Tours, the invader of north Pembrokeshire. An ancestor had been one of the adherents of Strongbow, Earl of Pembroke, in the invasion of Ireland. The male line died out early; a subsequent owner was the Walter family of Roch and Rosemarket, from whom Lucy Walter was descended.

She was the mistress or wife of Charles II and mother of the unfortunate Duke of Monmouth. Paynters, Allens and Lloyds owned the Castle afterwards and it is now in the possession of the Lloyd Philipps family. No admission.

Dale Castle

Dale Castle overlooks Dale roads, 13 miles from Haverfordwest; it has been altered and enlarged into a modern residence, the old Castle being incorporated in the present South wing; some old vaulted rooms are used for stabling.

In 1293 Robertus de Valle held the manor, and in 1485 a member of the same family acted as bard to Sir Rhys ap Thomas. The Walters of RhosMarket, to whom the celebrated Lucy Walters (friend of Charles II.) was related, once owned this Castle. The present owner is R. Lloyd-Philipps, esq..

The Castle RCAM

The present Castle of Dale consists of a north and south wing, with a connecting passage, but the only original portion is the South wing, which constructively remains much as it originally appeared though its appointments have been greatly modernised. The lower storey has a plain vault – Visited 21st September 1920.

NB

The name of this place appears originally to have been Valle, not Dale. There was a knighted family called Valle in medieval Pembrokeshire and in 1293 Robert de Valle recieved a grant of a weekly Market and annual Fair at his manor of Valle (Rol. Cart., Ed D)

An earlier member of the family Robert Fitz Richard de Valle, one of Strongbow's retenue, founded a nunnery at Timolin.co. Kildare about the year 1200 (Journal Kildare Arch Soc ii 414)

The Vales appear to have been succeeded at Dale by the Walters of Roch and Rosemarket of which family the celebrated Lucy Walters, mother of the unfortunate Duke of Monmouth, was a member. Her portrait at Dale passed with the house to a family named Paynter, who sold the property and removed the portrait to Portclew, near Lamphey, where it remained at the date of the compilation of the Pem. Arch. Survey (1896- 1907)

The Martyr Stone

This stone which stands close to the entrance gate of Dale Castle, formerly stood at the junction of High Street with Dark Street, Haverfordwest. It was believed to mark there of the site of the martyrdom by fire of William Nichol in April 1558. When the present modern pillar of red granite was erected on the spot, the stone was taken to Dale Castle. It is a shaply boulder with rounded top, having a height above the soil of 50 ins. A breadth of 20ins and a width of 7 ins. -- Visited 21st September 1920.

Windmill

Dale windmill is a circular, rubblestone-built tower, the walls slightly battered. It was probably built c1830 for the Dale Castle Estate (possibly as a rebuild of an earlier mill which had been recorded in 1729) and operated until c1900. The cap and machinery were removed, but the tower was re-roofed and used as a store by the adjacent Windmill Farm. In 2009 the tower was restored by the Dale Environment group and Friends of the Pembrokeshire Coast National Park, with Grant Aid from Cadw. The walls were repointed and limewashed, and the low-pitched roof with its short ridge was reinstated.

Mrs Bevan's School

I visited this school on the 15th January in company with the Incumbent. It is held in a room formerly a corn store, lent and furnished by Lloyd Philipps esq. of Picton Castle. It is a long and rather low room, fitted on the National plan. The master's manner with the children was not gentle. I heard him give a class lesson in Simple Addition from the mounted slate to 18 boys, the third class. They took places; many of the appeared to have little idea of numbers; the sum came to 225. I asked them to Read these figures off. One said 27 another 11 and the third 37. The master seemed to teach thoroughly; his English however was middling "This here line's fifteen" and many similar expressions escaped him. Out of a class of 16 girls, 10 read with ease, from the Sermon on the Mount. The master made them spell each verse.

There were present 14 older boys and girls, studying arithmetic only. They had little time for school, and all of them were able to Read. One of them was holding my horse; two preferred not being questioned (one of these was 21); I examined the remaining 11. I found four of them had been at school with the dame who had preceded the establishment of Mrs Bevan's school at Dale; the other seven had been in school at Marloes with Mr Davies. The copies were clean; the girls were not taught sewing; the master's wife (he said) "might teach them but there was no pay for it.

Acc to rcahmw event and historical information:

1907 27th December

The Dei Gratia was a wooden brigantine built at bear river, nova scotia, in 1871. Technical and configuration specifications are given as 225gt, 190nt: 111ft length x 27ft 5in breadth x 13ft depth; 1 deck; official number 64014. At time of loss 27 december 1907, the vessel was owned by M Fleming of Youghal and registered at that port. The brigantine was carrying coal and salt from cardiff to youghal It had sought shelter in Dales Road during a southeasterly force 10 gale, but broke from its moorings to go ashore on black rocks.

1936 5th january

The Ethel May was a wooden schooner built by Robert Jones at Rhyl in 1868. Technical and configuration specifications are given as: 20.08gt, 65/07rt; 80.5ft length x 20.5ft breadth x 8.5ft depth in hold; 1 deck, 2 mast, rigging schooner, stern elliptical, built carvel, head scroll, framework wood; official number 7655. The schooner stranded on the black rock, Dale bay, on 5 january 1936. The schooner's crew were saved by the local rocket apparatus rescue team. John Kearney gave his deposition regarding the loss to the receiver of wreck on 17 January 1936.

1866 10th November

The Aldred Eliza was a smack registered at Rouville in France, and carrying a cargo of coal from Cardiff to Rouville. It was caught in a hurricane on 10 november 1866 along with several other vessels it was driven ashore near Dale and went to pieces.

1964 14th march

HMS Barking was one of sixty-two such ships built for world war 2 all prefixed with the letters 'bar'. The barking was built by Lobnitz & co Ltd, Renfrew in 1941. Technical and configuration specifications are given as 153ft long x 32ft breadth; 630 gt; screw propulsion powered by a single boiler linked to a triple expansion engine. The bar class were used for various heavy lift purposes including boom-defence, cable laying, salvage and buoy work. HMS Barking was laid up in reserve, and then disposed of by sale on 6 march 1964 to Thomas Ward's ship breaking yard at Briton ferry. The vessel was on tow with no one on board when it broke adrift from the tug in wind conditions se force 6, and unable to reconnect another tow line, drove ashore some half a mile from St Ann's Head almost under the coastguard station. Barking went ashore at 9.15 am at high water on 14 March 1964. The rocks on the beach penetrated the hull as the tide fell, and all efforts to refloat the vessel failed. The vessel was abandoned for ten years, breaking its back in the process, until 1974 when a salvage company began dismantled the vessel where it lay. The vessel is reported to have been heavily salvaged, but much still lies on the beach.

Little Castle Head

The stormswept headland presents little sign of the small tumulus on of near this point which was excavated a few years ago, when "some ashes and water worn pebbles were all that was discovered" (Pem. Arch Survey 87a) Traces of low banks, running in various directions and much weather worn, point to occupation of this bleak spot by man, but only excavation can afford complete certainty – Visited 30th September 1920.

A curved sweep of bank and ditch enclose the tip of Little Castle Point, the interior being a blunt triangle c.40m by 50m. There is a causewayed entrance towards the south terminal of the defences. A barrow has been recorded nearby, RCAHMW

Brunt circle

Traces of a stone circle are to be seen on a patch of rough ground midway between the farmsteads of Brunt and Snailston. Two low stones 32ft apart, are visible, while three or four others are said to be in situ but they could not be located on account of the dense undergrowth. Until recently a fine maenhir stood erect about 100yds to the northwest of the stones ; it was "thrown" and buried when the land was brought under cultivation – Visited 30th September 1920.

NB – In the year 1909 the late W Done Bushell F.S.A. having examined the spot wrote thus :- "As to the circle at Brunt it is not easy to infer with accuracy what may have been its former character and dimensions. But it appears to present some very interesting characteristics. It seems to have consisted of two concentric circles, one a small one of some 12ft radius, and the other an outer circle with no less radius than some 350 ft. There are about 13 stones still left uncovered of the outer circle, and those which appear to be in situ – some have, I think, been moved – are at uniform distance from each other of about 36ft. ...I should add that there are one of two other stones at the Brunt Farm circle which may have been used for warning purposes" (Arch Camb 1909 VI ix 242)

On the other hand, Mr T.C. Cantrill of HM Geological survey (Arch Camb 1915 p182) observes " A few yards east of Sanilton farm house several springs break out into a boggy hollow, and give rise to a small stream which , just before reaching the shore of Mill Bay, joins the united streams coming down from the Brunt Springs. The head of the boggy hollow at Sbailton forms a slightly convex curve facing downstream i.e. Southwards. along this curve has been placed, at some remote period – probably when the ground was first enclosed – fibe large boulders of ingneous rock, dragged off the adjacent fields out of the way of the plough. Another, probably too large to move, is said to lie buried in the field to the north. On these flimsy foundations a "circle" has been constructed, with the help of the usual astronomical scaffolding. Unfortunately for the theory, the line of stones does not confine itself to the circumference of the proposed circle, but, making a sudden bend to the south is carried on bt some scattered boulders on the western side of the hollow, while the final member of the series may be seen in th drive , 100 yds west of Snailton farm house" It is probable that the dispersion of the stones, which has been very marked within the last few years, had already produced a considerable clearance between the visit of Mr Done Bushell and that of Mr Cantrill, and that the difference between the accounts of the two gentlemen may be thus accounted for. The removal of a fine erect monolith from the adjacent field is unquestionable.

Great Castle Head Rath

The entrenchment consists of two ramparts and two banks, with three ditches, enclosing a headland and cutting off an area of not more than half an acre. The sides of the promontory arer imperfectly protected by steep slopes above low cliffs. Which probably were originally scarped, remains of which are to be seen on the southern side. The main rampart is 70 ft. Long, 7ft. High, with 20ft.fall to a shallow ditch. The second rampart is 140ft Long is 5ft lower than the inner line, and between them is a low bank, 5ft lower than the second rampart: the floor of the ditch between them must be near the ground level. This bank is joined to the second rampart by a face flanking the roadway of the entrance, which is between the entrenchments, and an artificiaial scarping on the top of the steep slope above the rocks on the southern side of the promontory. Its outer rampart has a 17ft drop to a ditch 5ft deep. 4ft of which is artificially built up; this outer bank is 200ft Long and was indefensible in itself.

From the sea distinct traces are visible of a track or path down the cliff on the south side of the promontory, although it is now inaccessible owing to the fall of rock in places.

It is recorded by Pem. Arch. Survey. That "about a peck of unworked flints were found here in one Nest" and in the Tenby Museum are two worked flints found "in the earthwork known as Great Castle in the parish of Dale" in August 1879 -- Visited 21st September 1920.

1993 Great Castle Head promontory fort is a coastal promontory enclosure, sundered by landslips, with an interior denuded by erosion, defined by two lines of rampart, ditch & counterscarp, showing a possible, centrally placed entrance: excavation in 1993-4 demonstrated occupation beginning in the early to middle Iron Age and continuing through at least into the period: the site appears to have been adapted as a medieval, Castle fortification, being eventually abandoned in the 13th century. Source: Crane 1999 (AC 148), 86-145.

1990's Weather and waves have taken their toll on Great Castle Head for over two millennia. The site has some of the most massive promontory defences of all the Pembrokeshire coastal forts. In the late 1990s, with a serious danger that the remainder of the fort might be lost to coastal erosion without record, an excavation was mounted by Cambria Archaeology, funded by Cadw. As at Porth y Rhaw, the work revealed that the fort had been densely occupied, with the defences originally finished with stone walls and timber work. Postholes, a spindle-whorl and sherds of Pottery confirmed Iron Age and occupation, but finds of medieval Pottery also suggested to the excavator, Pete Crane, that this may have been refortified as the first Dale Castle when the Normans occupied South Pembrokeshire. A First World War cap badge was also found, probably lost when the fort was used as a look-out post for coastal defence. (From: Pembrokeshire - Historic Landscapes from the Air, RCAHMW 2007).

Dale Point Camp

What seems to have been a small promontary camp formed in the usual manner by cutting of the headland of Dale Point with a bank has been entirely swept away by the construction of a modern road to the Point. A spindle-whorl was found on the site during the progress of the work.

A coastal promontory fort where a line of two ramparts with an intermediate ditch, about 68m in overall length and having a centrally placed entrance, delimit a cliff-girt promontory area about 316m in depth. Archaeological excavations, up to about 1975, on the entrance area indicated a sequence, fixed by radio-carbon dating, of palisades, banks and a stone revetment, sealed by an occupation horizon of producing dates of about 780-810BC. This sequence was overlain by the existing ramparts and associated occupation (Benson & Williams 1987). Bronze Age, Iron Age and were all obtained from the excavation. Internally a rectangular emplacement and trackway have been excavated on steeply sloping ground (Benson & Ramsey 1992).

A nineteenth century fort occupies the point of the promontory.

Hook Stones

It is difficult with any degree of certainty to locate these stones, which "may either be the remains of a stone circle or perhaps an alignment" (Pemb Arch Survey) and enquiry on the spot yielded no result. It is quite possible that they have been cleared away since 1896 – Visited 30th September 1920

On or near the same spot the Survey notes "hut circles which seem to have marked a prehistoric village or summer camp. Flint chips and imperfect implements found here" Worked flints from "Hook Camp" are in the Tenby Museum

Harry's Cart [? Court] House

At this spot Henry, earl of Richmond, afterwards Henry the Seventh, is said to have landed on the 1st August 1485.

Old Pembrokeshire Parishes (Brown) states " that the Earl landed just outside Milford Haven; Pemb Arch Survey - but the late Henry Mathias of Haverfordwest had "always understood that the Earl rounded St Ann's Head, brought up in Mill Bay, and landed on the beach at a point marked on the Ordinance Map Harry's Cart House, the site of an old mill, where the stream of water dividing the farms of Snailston and Brunt empties into the sea"

NB

George Owen, who, as Deputy Vice Admiral of South Wales, had excellent means of information, and who may have spoken with men whose immediate ancestors may have beheld the disembarkment of Henry, in his Brief Description of Milford Haven, written in 1595, says " Neere this point of Dale between yt and the towne of Dale, landed King Henry the 7th and his army from Brytayne [Britanny] when he came into England and conquered King Richard the third".

But Richard himself in a letter dated 11th August, 1485 to Henry Vernon, a squire of his body, says " Our rebelles and traitours departed out of the water of Sayn (Seine) the first day of this present moneth making their cours westwardes ben landed at Nangle besides Mylford Haven in Wales on Sunday last passed, as we be credibly enfourmed" (Quote from Owen's Pembrokeshire i, 542).

Dale Meadow

Until recently the holders of burgage tenements at Dale preserved the right of depasturing cattle in the meadows east by south of the village after the Lord of the manor had cleared off the Hay (Lewis Top Dict, Wales) The right is no longer exercised.

"The late John Rees(one time the oldest inhabitant) stated that his father recollected ruins at this spot, which were known as the Town Hall (Pemb Arch Survey) – Visited 21st September 1920.

Rnas Dale RCAHMW

The airfield opened in June 1942 and was a Satellite Landing Ground (SLG) for Talbenny. Dispersal points, hangars, workshops and accommodation blocks were to the north west of the runways. In September 1943, when the Admiralty took over Dale, several developments were made including a new concrete apron; the building of a standard Royal Navy pattern four-story control tower; British Concrete Federation (BCF) concrete huts replaced wooden ones and two naval Mainhill hangars were built to supplement the airfield T2s and blister hangars. The perimeter track and some of its dispersal pads are still visible, but overgrown. Several Maycrete, Nissen and BCF huts are extant and are used by local farmers and companies. One of the RAF officers' accommodation blocks retains wartime cartoons of aircraft drawn directly on the painted brick walls. These were drawn by Sub Lieutenant 'Dax' Dashfield who served at RNAS Dale [Pembrokeshire Life July 2013]. The station's Battle Headquarters also remains, although a control tower has been demolished.

The first squadron to use Dale were the 304 Squadron with their Vickers/Warwick Wellingtons who arrived on 15 June 1942 in support of the Wellingtons of 311 Squadron already based at Talbenny. At the end of March 1943, 304 Squadron was transferred to Docking in Norfolk. Coastal Command Development Unit from Tain began to operate from Dale in April 1943. Over the summer, whilst a Drem airfield lighting system was installed at Talbenny, Dale became the base for 303 Ferry Training Unit (FTU). On 5 September 1943, Dale became the base for 794 Squadron of the Royal Navy Fleet Arm Air. 794 Squadron were a target towing units utilising Boulton Paul Defiants, Fairey Fulmars, and Miles Masters and Martinets. 794 Squadron moved to Henstridge on 22 November 1943, and were replaced by 762 Squadron on 1 April 1944. The unit operated Bristol Blenheims and Beaufighters, and later Wellingtons and De Havilland Mosquitoes. The unit moved to Ford on 8 December 1945. In the summer of 1945, the fighter direction school Squadron 790 operated from Dale working with the ground training school at Kete. A nightfighter school was established on 1 February 1946 with Fairey Fireflies and Avro Ansons. The school was disbanded on 1 October 1946 to join with 790 Squadron. When 790 Squadron were re-assigned to Culrose on 13 December 1947, Dale closed as an airfield.

Dinas,

A straggling village on the A478 east of Fishguard. The village runs along the foot of the steep northern slope of the Carningli- Mynydd Dinas upland. Millions of years ago the coastal strip hereabouts was beneath the sea, and breakers crashed against the cliffs some 200 feet above present sea-level. You can still see the old stacks and cliff-face crevices from the road together with spectacular meltwater channels cut during the Ice Age.

The parish Church, built in 1860, is at Brynhenilan.

To the north is Dinas Island, so called because it is almost an island separated from the mainland by a deep glacial meltwater channel. The narrow valley once known as Ynys Fach Llyffan Gawr (The little Island of Llyffan the Giant). It had its own herd of feral goats until 1947. The walk around this headland is magnificent, Dinas Island is the locale for two of R.M. Lockley's books, namely Island Farmer and Golden Year.

Dinas "the little fort" is a long strung out village that follows in part an ancient shore line.

Topographical Dictionary of Wales Dinas 1839 Lewis

DINAS, a parish, in the union of Cardigan, hundred of Kemmes, county of Pembroke, South Wales, 5 miles (N. E. by E.) from Fishguard; containing 820 inhabitants. This parish is situated on the coast of St. George's Channel, and intersected by the turnpike-road from Fishguard to Newport. It probably owes its name, signifying "fortress," or "city," to the bold promontory of Dinas Head, which forms one side of Fishguard bay, and was fortified on the land side by an agger, now nearly demolished. The area of the parish is 2000 acres, of which one fifth part is common or waste land. The living is a discharged rectory, rated in the King's Books at £8; patron, Thomas Lloyd, esq.: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £140, and there is a glebe-house, with a glebe of forty acres. The Church, dedicated to St. Brynach, occupies a remarkable situation on the beach, and at spring tides the walls of the churchyard are washed by the sea: but it is probable that this was not the site of the original structure, as there is a place in the vicinity called Bryn Hênllan, "old Church Hill." Here are places of worship for Baptists, Independents, and Calvinistic Methodists, with a Sunday school held in each of them.

Dinas Cwm-yr-Eglwys Church

According to legend it is believed that St Brynach founded the original Church here 6c.

In 1849 The Church, was described as dedicated to St. Brynach, occupies a remarkable situation on the beach, and at spring tides the walls of the churchyard are washed by the sea.

1851 Dinas Parish Church "Dinas Church is situated on an isthmus. The Chancel was washed away by an encroachment of the sea in November last and it has not been rebuilt. It is greatly desired in the Parish if there were funds for the purpose to transfer to a new site" Watkin William Thomas BC, Rector, Dinas Rectory.

The Church was ultimately inundated by a bad storm, the roofless remains are still there in Cwm yr Eglwys. A new St Brynach's was eventually built in the village (ie. up on the Hill away from the beach

The present Church is modern having been erected after the destruction of the original Church during the great storm of October 1859

RCAM The old Parish Church dedicated to St Brynach

The earlier Church stood At the eastern end of the natural defile. The existing remains show it to have consisted of chancel, nave, double bellcote at the west end, and pointed doorway in west wall, all of fairly early work. The surrounding graveyard is protected by a massive modern wall – Visited 21st July 1914

St Brynach's Church, Cwm-Yr-Eglwys

The upstanding remains comprise the west wall. Stone for the Church have been incorporated into the seawall that defends it. Of note is an incised stone believed to have been part of the sundial. Two undated cist burials were found during repairs to the seawall in 1981.

Event and Historical Information:

The earliest surviving document for the parish and possibly the Church is the Norwich Taxation of 1254 which notes 'dispensation, at the request of the cardinal of the Holy Apostles, to Maurice to hold the churches of Dinas and Nambeude, together with that of Hebernath; the value of all three not exceeding 12 ½ marks.'

A drawing by H Gastineau c 1825 is believed to show its final form – a nave measuring 36ft x 14ft orientated east-west, with a chancel measuring 18ft by 12ft on the eastern end, and a transept measuring 18ft x 12ft adjoin the southern wall. Above the west door, there was a Bell-cote. The architectural history preserved in the building's fabric was lost in the Great Storm of 1859.

Cwmyreglwys lies exposed to the northeast and the storm's resultant surge of 15ft (4.5m) above normal high water carried away the side wall and roof. In the Haverfordwest and Milford Haven Telegraph by Owen Edwards, Coroner to the Northern Division of Pembrokeshire, he described 'the sea washing right through it. The churchyard is much injured. Several houses are damaged; one house in particular is nearly destroyed'. To the east of the church, a schooner, the Mathildis, and a sloop were lost. Eight bodies were subsequently washed ashore or recovered from the cliffs.

Two burials are recorded in the Dinas Burial register for 30th October – 'Unknown drowned in a shipwreck during a terrific gale Oct 25th 1859. Abode, both Cardiganish as supposed'.

Dinas St Brynach: Only the west gable with a 15c doorway and a fragment of the south wall remain beside the shore. The rest of the Church was destroyed in a gale in the autumn of 1859. Old drawings show it as cruciform with a double bellcote on the west gable.

On 8 Nov., 1859 the schoolroom was licensed for divine service on account of the destruction of the Church. This is no doubt the date when the sea encroached on the shore, and washed away a portion of the old Church, known as Cwm yr Eglwys Church, the remains of part of which are still to be seen at the little cove called Cwm yr Eglwys, situated at the north end of the small valley between what is known as Dinas Island and the mainland land.

Dinas (S. Brynach). —An Elizabethan Chalice with Paten cover of the Amroth type. There are no Hall marks discoverable. The cup has two bands of decorated strap-work round the bowl, the upper of which interlaces and encloses the usual woodbine foliation whilst within the lower appeals the following inscription "POCVLVM • ECLESIE * DE » DENASE ". This vessel has undergone much reparation. The knop which divides the stem is ornamented with intermittent lines. The Paten cover measures 3 in. in diameter, 1 in. in height. On the foot or handle is inscribed within a circle of decorated strap-work the date " 1574".—

besides an electro-plated Paten, there is a pewter Plate, 12 in. in diameter. On the rim is engraved the letters which are doubtless Churchwardens' initials. A stamp underneath is almost obliterated, the letters KER alone being decipherable. The maker may have been [Daniel Par]ker who was under Warden of the Pewterers' Company in 1710 or perhaps [Par]ker Loshen.

Cwm-Yr-Eglwys; Dinas Harbour

A small harbour has been created by utilising the protection of a rocky outcrop at the northern end of the bay.

Event and Historical Information:

This inlet has been used since the Middle Ages for the fishing, shipbuilding and for the export of slate from the cliff quarries. The land washed away by the Royal charter Gale of 25-26 October 1859 has removed much of the evidence for this activity.

Education

Richard Ebenezer, 1781-1837, a Calvinistic Methodist minister, was born at Trefin, Pembrokeshire, and when about eighteen years of age he left his father's house, and opened a day school at Dinas, near Fishguard. He was ordained in 1811, and two years later became secretary of the general association of the connexion in South Wales. Eminent Welshmen

The State of Education in Wales 1847

The parish has a resident Clergyman, it is mainly agricultural with labourers receiving 6d and 8d a day with food and 1s a day without. Fishermen generally worse off. The moral character is regarded as good as regards sobriety, industry and quietness. No disturbances during the Rebecca Riots. The main large landowners do not reside in the parish and there is only one farmer paying over £100 in rent per annum the rest are mainly small freeholders farming their own land. There are no subscriptions for a school and those who can afford it send their children to Haverfordwest and Fishguard. There has been no free school for many years and certainly many children attend no school. Some adults can read and write in Welsh and there would be problems if a school was set up under the National school rules of attending Church on Sunday also the School teachers should understand Welsh. Information from William Thomas Watkin Dinas Rectory

Parish of Dinas Mrs Bevans School I visited this school on the 22nd of January, It had only just been opened, and was being held in the Church where the communion table served for the master's desk. He had not yet commenced teaching writing and arithmetic. Of the 37 children present five attempted to read the Scriptures, of whom only one could read at all intelligibly – they did not understand what they had read, nor could they answer any questions, except saying that Christ died to save sinners, and that God made the world. The master was a lame man, ignorant and very imperfectly acquainted with English. The Church is in a most inconvenient position for little children. It is overhung by a very steep Hill, and stands on a little terrace at the bottom, projecting right into the sea.

Mrs Evan's Day School

On the 22nd of January I visited the above school; it was held in a room part of a dwelling house. The furniture consisted of two small square tables and a round one, with three benches and other household furniture. I heard a class read the 29th chapter of the book of Exodus; one only could read with anything approaching to ease. The dame read alternate verses with her pupils. She is an intelligent person and had evidently received more than a common education. They did not know who wrote the book of Exodus, or what other books Moses wrote. The children knew very little English I had to conduct the examination chiefly in Welsh. Three knew their multiplication tables, could repeat the days of the week in English, twelve months in a year – did not know how many yards in a mile nor inches in a foot, three feet in a yard – could tell some of the names of the towns in Pembrokeshire , but named Cardigan as being one ----- David Lewis – Assistant

Macpelah Day School

I visited this school on the 22nd of January; it is held in a Baptist Chapel. There are no pews, but a pulpit, with moveable tables, desks, and benches, the latter not of very uniform or tidy description. A great proportion of the scholars were adults. They were chiefly studying arithmetic and writing; but I heard 32 read the Bible; no more than 6 read with ease. The master, who appeared a bustling active man, questioned them rather in the style of declaiming. They could in general answer very little. The best among them was a sailor, who was taking advantage of his stay in port to get a little more schooling. He had learned the position of the principal English ports in his employment. This appeared to me a school in which something might possible be learned.

Old Sailors Public House

The pub is shown as the 'Sailor's Safety' on OS 1st editon mapping and allegedly dates from 1593 and is named from the light it kept burning lead mariners to the safety of the bay and small beach for landing. Two mooring posts are shown at the highwater mark on the northside of the stream entering the bay and two lime kilns to the south provide additional industrial impetus for the inn's presence. Modern aerial photography suggests that the inn has been much extended and enlarged to the west, but the older building appears to remain. Maritime Officer, RCAHMW, December 2012

Standing Stone

A fine monolith standing 87 inches above the ground with a breadth to the south east of 57 inches and a maximum girth of 113 inches, on the field called Parc verrig hirion, 120 yards north west of the Black Horse Inn on the Fishguard -Newport high road. It bears no inscription or signs of tooling. On the day of inspection the field was in standing corn, the scanty crop immediately around being in marked contrast with the rest of the field and suggesting a substructure of some kind just below the surface of the soil.--Visited 21st July 1914

Standing Stone Dinas Cross

About half a mile directly east of the previous Maenhir, in a field south of Dinas Cross Chapel, is an erect stone standing 43 inches clear of the ground, with a width of 22 inches across its southern face. It is not marked on the Ordinance Sheet. The field is called Parc y Garreg – Visited 21st July 1914.

Castell or Castell Dinas

At Bwlch mawr the Dinas -Fishguard high road runs at the foot of a prominent detached spur of rock known as “Castell”. On the summit is an oval enclosure, about 90yds by 45 yds extending on all sides to the steep slopes of the spur; quarrying has to some extent destroyed the western side. Although much ruined, an enclosing low bank of dry walling of an average height of 3 ½ ft can be traced all round; a shorter stretch of the original facing of the wall is visible on the south east. The entrance is to the north east and has a present width of 4ft; it has evidently been altered. A well worn rock path descends to the level. The camp has the appearance of a prehistoric work, but may possibly be of later date. “ Two Cannon balls have been found in the enclosure” (Pem. Arch Survey 1906) The ruined condition of the earthwork, and the conversion of the enclosure into a garden, precludes any definite opinion being formed of it – Visited 24th June 1920

Dinas Island Camps

The rocky peninsular known as Dinas Island, jutting out picturesquely on the north of the parish into St George's Channel, is divided from the mainland by a natural ditch or hollow way, which, though now dry, may at an earlier period have been filled with water at high tides. This ditch is in length about ¾ mile; it stretches in a slight convex line across the base of the island or root of the peninsular, as it really is. Each end of the ditch reaches the sea is a small defensive position, but so far as the difficulty of the site and the faint indications now remaining permit of conclusions being formed, it may be said that the two positions differ from each other in important respects, and the differences suggest two widely opposed periods of construction. Though there is certainly no reason to connect one position with the other, the original 1in Ordinance map of 1838 fills up almost the entire space between the two ends of the hollow way on the north or Dinas Island side of it with the word “Entrenchment” as though the intention of the surveyors of that date was to denote the existence of some form of military work stretching from side to side of the peninsular. Singularly, however the 1838 Ordinance Map does not show a camp or defensive position at either end of the hollow way, though it prints the name “Pen Castell” at the western end. As indicationg a work of antiquity there is nothing but the expressive term “Entrenchment” which trails its Long length across from sea to sea.

The modern 6in Ordinance sheet to a certain extent reverses this position by leaving out the word “Entrenchment” from any part of the northern side of the ditch or hollow way. On the other hand it marks the presence of a small promontory fort which we proceed to inventory briefly:

Dinas Island Castell (west)

A bank, now hardly traceable above ground, has been drawn across the base of a tiny headland, but it has lost all distinctive character and almost existence in its never ceasing struggle with the elements. In length this bank may have extended 70 yds; the entrance was probably at the southern end of the bank. A projecting rock below the enclosure is known as Pen Castell, and an adjoining cave as Ogof he gastell – Visited 21st July 1914

Dinas Island Castell (east)

The dense undergrowth that covers the whole of the northern or Dinas Island margin of the hollow way which divides the headland from the main, has in the course of the previous summer (1923) to some extent been cleared and thinned, so that a hitherto unsuspected but quite unmistakable enclosure of early military type has been revealed. The enclosure is placed at the angle where the hollow way reaches the little bay of Newport, and the coast line turns sharply northwards along the western side of the head. As at the western end of the trench, the eastern enclosure terminates in a small creek. This low sandy Haven continues the southern bank of the trench, and a few yards above what may once have been high water mark is the site of a little Chapel upon which the sea slowly encroached, and finally, in October 1859, which it succeeded in putting out of use altogether. On the northern, or island side of the trench, the land rises slightly to this south eastern corner, and on the seaward side of the angle the cliff leaves space for a narrow lane at its foot. This side of the enclosure would seem to have no defence along the verge of the cliff, otherwise than a line of stakes; but, for a distance of 25yds along the margin of the trench there runs a well constructed rampart of earth and stones which rises to a height of 10ft; beyond, it takes a curve outwards and upwards, and finally with a wide sweep, it reaches the cliffs at a point about 30yds north of where it started. The total area enclosed between the banks and the cliff would be from one quarter to one third of an acre. The entrance could not be located but will probably be found on the northern side of the camp at the point where the bank approaches the verge of the cliff, whence a sunken trackway is carried over the natural rock to the shore below. – Visited 6th June 1923.

Dinas Island Castell

Dinas Island Castell is a sub-rectangular enclosure, measuring 60m by 50m, set on a promontory, with an entrance on the north, overlooking Cwm-yr-Eglwys. There are traces of a sub-divided rectangular building, 24m by 8m within J.Wiles 19.03.02

Island Farm, Dinas Island

Situated on the promontory called Dinas Island, approached by farm drive from Pwllgwaelod.

An early to mid-C19 farmhouse, probably incorporating earlier work; the centre of a large farm encompassing the whole peninsula. Owned by the Harris family in the early 19th century and farmed co-operatively in 1940s by R M Lockley and others as described in his book The Island Farmers, 1946.

The farmhouse is two storeys in 2 sections. The mid-19th century upper end is whitewashed, slate-hung, 2-window service range which was altered in the late 19th century, whitewashed rubble with slate roof and stone end stack.

The upper end has 4-pane sashes, 4-panel door and overlight, the windows set well to right. Door is in broad porch, flat slate slab supported on 2-turned wood columns with shallow arched fascia.. Front garden enclosed by rubble wall with iron gate.

Lower service range has wider spacing to left 2-windows than to right 2, 4-pane sashes. The upper ones with painted brick heads and concrete sills, the lower ones possibly stone voussoirs and rough slate sills. Fourth window to right is set slightly lower. Outbuilding on E end with grouted slate roof and single door.

A good example of a traditional farmhouse with local slate hanging, once common in the area, now rare. CADW Listed Building Database.

Pillow Mound, Dinas Island

A pillow mound, identified through aerial reconnaissance (16.11.2010), is located on the northern coast of Dinas Island.

The mound is cigar-shaped and measures some 20m long (aligned NE-SW) and 4m-5m wide with a height of 0.5m. It is not obviously ditched though it was visited at a time of dense bracken overgrowth. The mound lies on a moderately steep north-east facing slope between trackways, at a point just before the ground falls away steeply to the cliff-tops below, in rough pasture enclosed by abandoned field banks. It appears to be undisturbed and a well-preserved example of its type.

Carn gwiber, the Dragons Stone

There are now no traces of a cairn at this spot, nor any local tradition of the devastation of a dragon (wiber); but there can be little doubt the site was once occupied by a mound and the adjoining field to the south is called Parc y garn.

Mathildis

The Mathildis was a wooden schooner built and completed at New Quay in June 1842. Technical and configuration specifications are given as 96 tons burthen; 68ft length x 18.5ft breadth x 10ft depth in hold; 1 deck, 2 masts, standing bowsprit, square stern, carvel built, woman's bust figurehead, official number 13144. Lloyds Register notes that the schooner had had part of a new deck in 1847 and another part in 1857, plus some repairs in 1852. It was registered at the port of Cardigan (14 in 1842). The schooner was a victim of the hurricane of 25-26 October 1859 which later became known as the Royal charter gale. The schooner was owned by consortium - the principal shareholder being Jenkin Phillips (18 shares) with the remaining shareholders being drawn primarily from New Quay. It was carrying a cargo of culm with six crewmembers onboard, including captain Joshua Jones, his stepson, and Owen Davies from Fron-wig. It was wrecked on Dinas Head.

Druidston [Drewston] Originally Drueston. A foreign knight of the reign of Henry I, one Alfred Drue, was signatory to several grants to religious houses in Dyfed. Drue seems to have founded Drueston in the first quarter of the 12c. The sandy cove was used by the FitzGerald contingent during Stongbow's expedition to Ireland.

The Rev. John Grant, Vicar of Roch and Nolton, in addition to inventing the measuring wheel gained a great deal of notoriety because of his condemning those of his parisioners from Roch and Nolton who, whilst looting a wrecked ship containing a cargo of Gunpowder on Druidston Sands caused it to blow up, killing many and blinding others. He was said to have declared openly that it was an act of God punishing them for their wickedness

History

Acc/to ---South Pembrokeshire --- M Mirehouse.

[Whose family owned Eastington when she wrote her book.]

Jestyn ap Owain ap Hywel Dda (King of South Wales, who died in 948) lived at Jestynton, which he called by his own name, and probably built; he is called Prince Jestyn, and was King Hywel Dda's favourite grandson. King Hywel Dda acquired South Wales, or Dyfed, through his wife Elen, daughter of Llywarch ap Hwfaidd, King of Dyfed, Hwfaidd died in 892, Llywarch in 905.

When the Normans first overran Pembrokeshire under Arnulph de Montgomery, in 1090, Narberth fell to the share of Sir Stephen Perrott, Knt., who built a Castle there, but not the one whose ruins we now see; Sir Stephen's Castle was razed to the ground by Grufudd ap Rhys in 1183.

Perrots

About this time Sir Stephen, by his marriage with Eleanor, daughter and sole heiress of Merchion ap Rhys ap Rhydderch ap Jestyn of Jestynton, acquired a great increase to his property, and appears to have gone to reside at Jestynton. His wife's name is given in some chronicles as Elen, in some as Eleanor; probably in those days it was the same name. His son, Sir Andrew, rebuilt the Castle of Narberth, whose ruins still remain; his daughter Catherine married Caradog or Cradock of Newton; the family later took the name of Newton and have connections with Angle and Llanstadwell .

The Perrotts continued to reside at Jestynton for several centuries, until their union with Haroldstone by Peter Perrott's marriage with Alice, heiress of Sir Richard Harold; they then resided at Haroldstone, near Haverford-west, for three centuries, until the time of the famous Sir John Perrott, son of Henry VIII., who became a man of great power in South Wales, owning much property. George Owen speaks of him as of ' Halle place in Nangle,' and Sir John held Haroldstone and Jestynton by inheritance and Carew Castle in trust for the King.

Previously to this, Sir Thomas Perrott of Haroldstone first introduced pheasants into Pembrokeshire; they increased to a certain extent, but afterwards " chose other landlords in other places," as the old chronicle quaintly puts it.

Sir Thomas took a leading part in the great Tournament given at Carew Castle by Sir Thomas ap Rhys on St. Georges Day, 1507, and is known to have been present at the landing of Henry VII. at Dale, and probably also at the Battle of Bosworth Field. Later he was Gentleman of the Bedchamber to Henry VIII.

His wife was Mary, daughter of James Berkeley (after Sir Thomas 's death she married Sir Thomas Jones of Abernarlais).

Sir John Perrott was her son by Herry VIII.; reputed to be fiery like his father, both in appearance and temperament. Sir John was born at Haroldstone, but was brought up almost entirely at the Court, being a great favourite with Henry. He was Deputy for Ireland from 1583 to 1588, and lived under three sovereigns: Henry VIII., Edward VI., and Elizabeth. He held the Castle of Carew in trust for the Crown, and was a great man both at Court and in South Wales; but he fell into disgrace in Elizabeth's time, was attainted, and all his property confiscated; he died a prisoner in the Tower in 1592.

It is probable that had he lived he would have been pardoned, as Elizabeth had many times refused to sign the warrant for his execution, saying always, when urged to do so, that he was a 'good and loyal subject.' He added the great north wing to Carew Castle (some attribute this to Sir Rhys ap Thomas in 1503), and in the inventory of his goods at his attainder is mentioned a quantity of glass 'to glaze ye windowes in ye newe buildinge' (this was locked up in a chamber, a glazier at Tewkesbury having the key), also 'deale or firr bordes, by estimacion provided for he dyninge chamber of the newe buildinge at Carewe,' also 'tymber red flamed for some partitions there.' There was a most exhaustive list made of all his possessions at Carew at the time Of his attainder, which is given in Mr. Edward Laws ' History of Little England beyond Wales '

Sir John Perrott's sister Jane married William Philipps of Picton, who was grandson of Sir Thomas Philipps of the Kilsant family; this family and the Perrotts inter-married several times.

In the public records is a document consisting of two leaves of paper, dated Haverfordwest, September 7, 1591 (33 Eliz.), setting forth a part of the possessions of Sir John Perrott, Knt., purchased of Sir Thomas Jones, Knt. (who married his mother). Among these are named half the Manor of Nangle (Hall Manor in Nangle), half the Manor of Castlemartin, that of Pwllcrochan, Rhoscrowther, Cocksey, 'a parcel of land late the property of Nicholas Dawes,' Lymney in Castlemartin, and Williamston, both purchased also from Nicholas Dawes.

Sir John Perrott's son, Sir Thomas , married Lady Dorothy, sister of Robert Devereleux, the ill-fated Earl of Essex. Queen Elizabeth restored Sir John's forfeited property to Sir Thomas , and was about to make him a Baronet when he died, on June 29, 1601. He left an only daughter, Penelope (a son, Roland, died young), who married first William Lewis, and second Sir Robert Naunton, Secretary of State to James I.; he died in 1635, his only son, James, an infant, in 1624; his only daughter married first Viscount Bayning, second Philip Herbert, afterwards fifth Earl of Pembroke. With Penelope Perrott terminated the direct line of the Perrotts of Pembrokeshire.

Philipps

Grove, a ruin between Stackpole and Pembroke, formerly belonged to Lloyd of Morril, in North Pembrokeshire. Thomas Lloyd of Morril married Frances, daughter of Hugh Philipps of Jestynton, brother of Sir Richard Philipps. Hugh's father was Sir John Philipps, eleventh Baronet, who was Sheriff in 1595; his mother was Anne, daughter of Sir John Perrott, who brought Jestynton as her dowry.

Meares

Later, we find the family of Meares at Jestynton when William Meares married Grace the sister of Griffith Dawes of Bangeston in 1643. William was Sheriff in 1673 George, his son, succeeded him at Jestynton, and was Sheriff in 1692 (the year Griffith Dawes of Bangeston died). George's great grandson, John, was Sheriff in 1800, and his son John in 1822, who married Charlotte, daughter of Sir Hugh Owen of Oriulton.

Arch Camb 1868 Domestic Architecture of South Pembrokeshire p79 Jestyington Prof. Freeman

One of the most perfect, if not the most perfect, examples of the domestic architecture of the district in the house of Eastington or Iseston, at no great distance from Nangle, and situated close to the shores of the bay of that name. In some earlier deeds it is spelt Estyngeston but its earlier form was Jestynton or Jestynstown being so called after its founder, Jestyn, a grandson of Howell Dda. The original name was probably Tre-Jestyn, or, as the Anglo-Normans would call it, Jestyngton. There are numerous instances in Pembrokeshire of the same change from Welsh to the English form.

This building is not only one of the most perfect, but it is one which presents least difficulty as to its real date which is that of the reign of Edward II (c1307) as fixed by Mr J H Parker. The property came into the Perrot family by the marriage of Stephen, the first of the Pembrokeshire line, with one of the two coheiresses of Meirchion (ap Rhys), the great-grandson of Jestyn. The present structure, therefore could not have been erected by this Stephen Perrot; nor is it certain that it occupies the site of the original house. The Perrots, however resided here for many generations, although Fenton thinks that, after the acquisition of Haroldston by marriage, their principle residence was transferred to the more agreeable neighbourhood of Haverfordwest, near which Haroldston is situated. But however this may be, it continued in the possession of the Perrots until the attainer of Sir John Perrot. His grandson, Hugh, a younger son of Sir John Phillips of Picton, was of this place, as appears from the Dale Castle Genealogies (p 129) and from his tomb stone, partly illegible, in Rhoscrowther Church.

During the close of the seventeenth and nearly the whole of the eighteenth century, it was the chief residence of the Meares, from whom the estate was purchased by the Mirehouse family of Angle. The building consists of the usual vaulted basements and the apartments above, consisting of two, namely the great Hall reached by an external flight of steps; and a smaller one adjoining it, for more private use. The Hall was lit by a small Early English two-light window at each end; others probably once existed in the other parts of the building, but have been replaced by square ones of a later date. A small newel- staircase leads to the little tower on the roof whence a wide prospect towards the Haven can be had. This might also serve as an additional defence to the angle between the two parts of the building. The present flight of stone steps is not the original one. The vaulted basements are not provided with means of warming, as so frequently the case. They are however, more lofty and spacious than usual in the district, and may have been intended for occupation, not merely as a repository for stores. The present lights in them are not original. The modern house of the Meares, recently removed, abutted on the western wall of the main building, and a farmhouse stands at present on the other side; so that as might be expected under the circumstances, no remains of external offices or defensive walls can be made out. There is, however, no doubt that in the present building we have substantially a complete residence of the early part of the fourteenth century and that it is not a remnant of a more extensive structure, as Fenton states.

It is well situated at the east end of Angle Bay, and must have been a fine place in its day its moat can still be traced, and the one remaining tower is immensely solid and strong. Eglwyswrw

A short half-hour later we find ourselves pacing the single 'street' of Eglwys-Erw, a picturesque village said to derive its name from the Church having been built upon a plot of land measuring an acre.

Fenton, on the other hand, attributes the origin of the name to a certain St. Erw, whose Chapel, containing the tomb of the patron saint, used to stand in a corner of the churchyard. In olden times the peasant folk were averse to being buried in this Chapel, owing to the prevalent superstition that their bodies were liable to be mysteriously ejected at dead of night, because, forsooth, St. Erw would brook no bedfellow!

Passing on between the neat, whitewashed cottages, we come to Sergeants' Inn, whose bow-windowed front stands near the upper end of the village. The somewhat unusual title of this hostelry is derived from the fact that, in earlier days, it was customary for the gentlemen of the Bar when 'on circuit' to foregather here; and the building next to the inn is still called the Sessions House. At Sergeants' Inn is to be seen a small chest-lid, incised with the rather enigmatical legend: I.H.S, PRESTAT E22E PROMETHEVS QUAM EPIMETHEUM, 1603.

Eglwys-Erw Church is soon disposed of; for it has been completely modernized, and bereft of any noteworthy features it may formerly have contained.

Eglwyswrw St Cristiolis

The Church has medieval masonry but the features are of 1829 and 1883 when a north transept was removed. There was once a Chapel near the holy well here but it was destroyed by order of Elizabeth 1's Privy Council because Catholics frequented it

The parish Church – St Eirw ? RCAM 1914

The present Church was restored in 1829, the work then carried out being probably rather in the nature of a thorough reparation than a complete rebuilding. It was further restored and adapted to modern requirements in 1883. It consists of chancel, nave western Bell cote and south porch. Prior to that year there existed on the south side of the nave a transeptal Chapel known to old parishioners as "y groes" the cross or crossing which was found to be too ruinous for retention. Writing of this feature, Fenton(tour 531) remarks " In the reign of Queen Elizabeth there was a sort of chantry Chapel in the churchyard wherein, on the south side was shown the tomb of the saint in hewn stone. The parishioners never buried in the Chapel from a superstitious that the corpses there interred would in the night time be ejected, wherefore, as the MS of George Owen has it "they hold opinion that their local holy saint would not have any bed fellow with him" The font is Modern – Visited 11th September 1914

On 28 May, 1883, a faculty was issued confirming the restoration of the Church.

In 1594 the free Chapel of Penkelly Vychan was in decay.Owen's Pem., Pt. ii, p. 312.

In a list, compiled about 1594, of Chapels formerly erected for pilgrimages, the greater number of which were then in ruins, appears the name of ' Capell Erow in Eglosserowe.Owen's Pem., Pt. II., p. 5.

Fenton asserts that Eglwyswrw Church was dedicated to St. Erw, and adds, on the authority of a MS. of George Owen, in his possession: ' In the reign of Queen Elisabeth there was a sort of chantry Chapel in the churchyard, wherein on the south side was shewn the tomb of the saint in hewn stone. The parishioners never buried in the Chapel, from a superstitious belief that corpses there interred would in the night time be ejected.' As however George Owen in the same MS. (Owen's Pem., Pt. II., p. 509) mentions Eglwyswrw as being a vicarage, it is possible that Capel Erow was this chantry Chapel.

Browne Willis in his parochiale wallicana ascribes the dedication of Eglwyswrw to St. Cristiolus, and enumerates Capel Erw and Pencelli Vechan, as well as the chantry Chapel in the churchyard, as subordinate Chapels to Eglwyswrw Church.

EGLWYS-WRW (EGLWYS-EIRW), a parish, in the union of Cardigan, hundred of Kemmes, county of Pembroke, South Wales, 6 miles (S. S. W.) from Cardigan, on the road to Haverfordwest; contains 560 inhabitants.

This parish anciently formed an inferior lordship, dependent on the superior one of Kemmes.

It is intersected by the river NeVERN, and is included in a very mountainous district, of which the most remarkable height is that called Percelly, forming the centre of a Long range extending across the county in a direction from east to west. The summit of the mountain commands a prospect of great extent; and over this elevated range passed the ancient Via Flandrica, or "Flemish Way," a which has obtained that appellation from the erroneous supposition of its having been constructed by the Flemings, who settled in this part of the principality in the reigns of Henry I. and Henry II. The parish comprises 3664 acres; it is almost entirely inclosed and under cultivation, and the soil is in general fertile. The village, which is situated near the base of the Percelly Mountains, is one of the most pleasing in the county, and contains a good inn and several respectable houses. The scenery in the neighbourhood is bold, and finely varied, and the hills are richly clothed with wood: Berllan is an elegant mansion, beautifully situated in grounds which are tastefully laid out, and adorned with luxuriant plantations.

A Fair is held on the Monday before November 22nd.

The living is a discharged vicarage, rated in the King's Books at £3. 13. 4., and endowed with £200 royal bounty, and £200 parliamentary grant; patron, the Lord Chancellor; impropiators, John Davies, and George Griffiths, esq.rs., whose tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £170, and who are also possessed of a glebe of 30a. 1r. 14p. valued at £21. 10. per annum: the vicarial tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £80, with a glebe of 25a. 27p., valued at £15.10. per annum, and a glebe house.

The Church is dedicated to St. Eirw; and in the time of Elizabeth there was a chantry Chapel in the churchyard, said to have contained the tomb of this saint.

The Baptists have a place of worship in the parish; and two Sunday schools are held, one of them in connexion with the Baptists, and the other with the Calvinistic Methodists.

A sum of £20 per annum was left to the poor of Eglwys-Wrw by John Jones, of Pantyderri, in the year 1729, but the bequest is at the present time unproductive.
Near the Church is a large tumulus.

The State of Education in Wales 1847

This parish has a resident Clergyman. It is an agricultural parish with labourers receiving 8d with food and 1s 2d to 1s 3d per day on their own finding. The moral character of the population is good. There are no landed proprietors resident in the parish and two farmers pay more than £100 per annum in rent but none contributes to provision or maintenance of schools. Most of the population have some reading skills but not writing and approximately 20 children have no schooling at all. Information from David Prathern Eglwyswrw

Parish of Eglwyswrw – Village school

The schoolroom is built in the churchyard, and adjoins the Church. It is in a good state of repair, with the exception of one end. It contains one master's desk, two desks for the scholars, and seven benches, but no maps of any kind. The master appeared well qualified. He had been in the excise, but had resigned with the ultimate view of succeeding as tenant to the farm which his father held. The scholars were farmers, mechanics and labourers children. My visit being made on Saturday, few were present.

Mrs Charles's School

This is held in the mistress's dwelling house. The furniture consisted of 3 tables, 2 chairs and 3 benches. The mistress spoke English correctly. She teaches the girls to sew as well as to Read and write. The scholars are the children of farmers, mechanics and labourers. The mistress's husband keeps the village day school. The copy books were taken home to be shown to the children's parents as is the case in some school weekly marked on the Ordnance sheet simply as “stone” this fine monolith, which is known locally as Cerrig y Derwyddon (the Druids Stone) stands erect on the second field south east of Pant y garn farmhouse. It is now bur a fragment of the pillar stone that once stood to the height of 10ft above ground, and that a few years ago was blasted to pieces, the upper portion 6ft in length being thrown into the neighbouring hedge. It sides, at a distance of one foot above ground measure east 40 west

Cerrig y Derwyddon

33 north 25 south 21 inches respectively. In the year 1900 the then vicar of the parish heard an aged parishioner say that he remembered the stone when it was unbroken and doubtless at an earlier period it did not stand alone. Visited 9th September 1914

Castell Llainfawr

This mound stands in the field immediately to the south of the farm house of Llainfawr, about $\frac{3}{4}$ of a mile south east of the parish Church. The remains are those of a mound some 5ft in height surrounded by a ditch of which slight traces exist on all sides except the south, where it is lost in a boundary hedge. A small stream issuing from an adjacent spring runs to the west of the work. The field on which the mound is placed is known as Parc Castell ucha, the next field south as Parc Castell issa – visited 11th September 1914

Castell

This earthwork lies about 300yds south west of the Parish Church. It consists of a somewhat oblong Bailey having the mound placed in the south west corner. The mound has a height of from 8 to 10 ft and a summit diameter of 16ft. The top is slightly depressed towards the centre. The Bailey (60ft by 90ft) is surrounded by a ditch; its somewhat obliterated entrance is in the north east corner; the rampart has an average height of 4ft, with a fall of 10ft to the bottom of the ditch, the counterscarp being 4ft high. The work is in a fair state of preservation. – Visited 9th September 1914.

Court

Nothing except the moat remains of the manor house of the lordship of Eglwysrw, the mansion house of Bishop David Martin (1293 – 1328) “being Lord thereof” as George Owen writes “A house both of account and strength; for I have seen there huge walls and rooms of great breadth, all environed with a strong and deep moat digged out of the main rock, fed with a fresh spring rising in the same and all the greens thereabout growne with chamomile” (Fenton Tour 532.) The site, now part of the modern farmhouse of Court is about 30yds by 20yds; it is surrounded on its north east and west side by the remains of a moat 15ft wide, which (on the east) is cut through rock. Here it is seen at its best, the remaining parts being overgrown and largely filled in with soil. Visited 15th September 1914

Capel Pencelli

As far as can be ascertained this Chapel stood on the opposite side of the lane to the Ordnance bench Mark 554, midway between Pencelli and Trewilym ichaf and at the northern end of two fields attached to the benefice of Eglwysrw. The site of the Chapel together with the adjoining field to the west was alienated from the living at the dissolution of St Dogmaels abbey. The site, now heavily covered with undergrowth bear traces of some small building having stood upon it, of which the foundations probably remain – Visited 15th September 1914.

Corllan, Eglwysrw,

Corllan is a small lofted cottage, dated 1726 by a carved stone set into its northern gable at high level. This single storey double room cottage is built from rubble stone which was rendered with whitewashed Roughcast in the mid twentieth century, with decorative raised banding around the windows, plinths and at corner quoining, all painted black. The joinery is white painted timber four-pane sash windows to the east front and a small square fire-window to the right. There are stucco window surrounds and slate sills.

The roof which was originally corrugated iron over thatch has been slated recently in plain, smooth, blue black fibre reinforced cement slates with two small roof windows. The southern gable has a small brick flue while the northern gable has an earlier short and wide stack serving the main inglenook fire below. There is a twentieth century addition to the right.

Cadw listed buildings RCAHMW,

Mynydd-Du Farmhouse, Eglwysrwr

Mynydd-du farmhouse is stone-built and retains a typical 17th century, Pembrokeshire, projecting lateral chimney and fireplace, but has been otherwise modernised in the late 19th century with some brick work and render finish to form a 2-storey 'L' shape central entry plan. The original plan form is uncertain; however the cow-house walls are thicker and probably were once connected to the fireplace stack, which is in-line. The main north-west façade is rendered, with a slate roof and brick end-chimney. Its entrance has a slate-roofed canopy and there are sash windows of various sizes, the largest of 16 panes to the parlour. At the south-east side, the lateral chimney base reduces at the present lean-to eaves-level, to form a large stack (now capped by its own slate roof), indicating that the original eaves line was for a low building.

The main entrance leads into a stair-lobby with kitchen beyond and opposite rear doorway. There is a parlour to the right of the main entrance with cast-iron fireplace and plaster ceiling. A dairy lean-to behind is entered by the rear doorway. The present roof is supported by softwood common rafters and purlins spanning a central cross-partition of brick. The first-floor is reached by a late 19th century stair with splat balusters and turned newels. There were three heated bedrooms, two of which have blocked fireplaces with brick arches situated in the south-east wall above the kitchen. The third room over the parlour retains a decorative cast-iron fireplace surRound in the south-west end wall.

A low, former 2-door cow-house, built of coursed rubble stone is attached in-line at the south-west gable-end, now with blocked openings and a central doorway on its south-east side. It appears to have had two pairs of opposed doorways and a window all with timber lintels. At the cow-house south-west gable-end there is a fireplace and alcove, both with stone lintels and both blocked in stone, and the site of a boiler blocks a doorway in the south-east corner. It was probably used as a bake/wash-house for a period, when the doorways were blocked and then reverted to farm use later. There are two roof-trusses similar to the combination range with late-19th century lapped and pegged softwood tie-beam trusses, covered by corrugated-iron. The south-west gable-end has partly collapsed obscuring some details, including a projection to the gable-end shown on the OS 25' second edition map of 1907.

The main building ranges and fields including privy are all shown on the OS first edition 25' map 1887 and a small enclosure beyond the stream to the south-east is annotated as Old Pinfold.

The immediate field walls surrounding the farm are curved and of large width, indicating that the site is of great age.

A stone-built, early C19th combination range, now with a corrugated-iron roof, is situated to the north-west of the adjacent farmhouse, on level ground. The range consists of a former cow-house and a stable, divided by a cart-house with lean-to. The late 19th century roof has pegged and lapped softwood collar-trusses seated on timber pads, two pairs of side-purlins and a diagonally set ridge-piece. The cow-house has a central lateral entry and there are remnants of two lines of stalls with iron tethering bars and chains. One stone slab stall partition exists, others formerly divided the space into two sets of 4, with cattle tethered facing the cross-walls.

A stable at the north-west end has a central lateral entry with opposed window opening and surviving posts for framed stalls at the east cross-wall, indicating there were two sets of stalls for 3 horses, each tethered facing the cross-wall.

The central cart-house has timber lintels to its opening and extends as a lean-to at the rear. Its entrance lintel retains a nailed block of wood with a hole for a former harr-hung doorway, similar to those seen at Carnachenwen, Mathry .

A drip-stone line in the east gable-end indicates a small structure formerly existed here, such as a pig-sty. Visited, through the Tir Gofal Project, 07/06/2006, Geoff Ward.RCAHMW,

A 2-storey farmhouse of late 17th century date, altered and extended probably in the 19th century. The walls are of local rubble masonry and a slate pitched roof with end stacks. 3-window front: 4-pane sashes and an off centre entrance. Rendered stone, Welsh slate roof, 2 storeys, dated stone, 1767.

Two-storey, five-window range, disposed as three-window to right and two-window to the left, a chimney between sections. One-window lower addition at the left end. whitewashed rubble stone with close-eaved slate roofs, and three rebuilt brick chimneys. Ground floor has continuous slate pent-roof, up to first floor sill level, not continued to the extreme right end, where small stretch of drip-course is visible. Three ground floor canted bay windows one each side of door in right section 8-16-8-pane sashes, one to the left of door in the left section with 8-12-8-pane casements and centre fixed light. Corniced flat tops, slate sills and stone bases. Doors have plain stucco surrounds.

PE/Domestic/SN12NW from Cadw

An early nineteenth century building to the rear of the Sergeant's Arms Inn, it is shown as a Meeting House on the Tithe Map of 1838, and as a school on the 1891 Ordnance Survey map. It is also said to have been a Chapel before becoming a Church Hall. It has a hipped lateral facade, one pointed window, two doors, and two windows at the rear. In 1997 it was being used as the base for the local Young Farmers Club. RCAHMW, February 2010.

Fishguard and Goodwick

Fishguard (Aberwaun)

North Pembrokeshire's main shopping centre, occupying an undulating clifftop site and linked to the villages of Abergwaun. (Lower Town) in the mouth of the Gwaun valley and Goodwick around the terminus of the railway line. Lower town, which must surely be one of the most attractive coastal settlements in Wales, with its old limewashed cottages and very narrow Streets, was once a busy shipbuilding and herring-fishing centre, and it is still popular with fishing and boating enthusiasts. The main town owes most of its growth to the last 150 years. There is a good shopping centre, and the Market Square is the centre of affairs. The Royal Oak Inn claims the distinction of having been the place where the surrender papers were signed following the Last Invasion of Britain in 1797.

Martin de Tours granted Aberwaun to Jordan de Cantington along with the surrounding area which came to form the Lordship of Cemaes.

Fishguard & Social -- The Scenery, Antiquities and Biography of South Wales - Benj Heath Malkin 1804.

The town of Fiscard is so filthy, so ill built and so uncivilized as almost to be interesting on these very accounts. One generation of fishermen, mariners and smugglers, has succeeded another without the knowledge or the energy to avail itself of natural advantage.

The principle exports at present are oats and butter.

They import goods from Bristol, culm, coal, lime and timber. The herring fishery has been much on the decline of late years. They seldom cure any for exportation, as the capture frequently will not suffice to answer the demand of the country for any article, which, with potatoes constitutes the food of the lower classes.

The Church is a most mean and squalid building without either spire or tower. It was made the prison of the French troops after their capture in the last war, nor could any place of confinement more miserable have been devised.

The Fishguard Fort built in 1781 of bricks and stone on a headland north of the Town.

An American privateer Stephen Manhant (Not John Paul Jones as is often quoted) had bombarded the town in 1779 before being chased off by a local smuggler.

The Privy Council approved a local request and at the outbreak of hostilities with France in 1793 allocated some finance for it. It consisted of a gun platform with ammunition storage and Guard room. Three Invalid soldiers were sent to man the garrison -- but were little use when the French landed as they only had three rounds of ammunition -- but they refused indignantly to spike their guns when Colonel Knox, in command of the Fishguard Fencibles marched his men smartly away from the scene of action. (1797).

Lower town was used for the filming of "Under Milk Wood".

Royal Oak -- was the place where surrender papers were signed following the last invasion of Britain in 1797. In Churchyard near lies Jemima Nicholas (the Welsh Heroine) who is reputed to have rounded up a bunch of Frenchmen with a pitchfork.

Fishguard was the home of Richard Fenton 18c historian.

Topographical Dictionary of Wales Lewis 1839 Fishguard

Fishguard, a Market-town and parish, in two divisions, the Upper and Lower, situated in the poor-law union of Haverfordwest, hundred of Kemmes, county of Pembroke, South Wales, 15 miles (N.) from Haverfordwest, 25 (N.) from Pembroke, and 249 (W. by N.) from London; containing 2013 inhabitants. The origin of the present town is of comparatively recent date, but the parish in many respects affords striking indications of remote antiquity. The Druidical relics which abound in the vicinity prove it to have been a resort of the votaries of that ancient religion, for the solemnization of their rites; and the extensive remains of foundations of old buildings still existing in a district within the parish, called Caerau, or "the fortifications," in which, though it has been for ages under cultivation, the progress of the plough is still occasionally obstructed, are strong evidences of its having contained a numerous population at a very early period. According to Mr. Fenton, the historian of Pembrokeshire, this district was inhabited by an ancient race long before the invasion of Britain by the Romans, whom he supposes to have subsequently had a settlement in this place, in which opinion he is confirmed, in some degree, by the discovery, near the spot, of chiefly of the Lower Empire.

Roman coins,

In the early part of the fifth century, St. Dubricius is said by Bale to have lived in retirement here, and to have presided over a school, which was numerously attended by the inhabitants of the surrounding country, for some time prior to his elevation to the archiepiscopal see of Caerlleon. Pwll Dyvrig, a spot in the romantic Valle of Gwayn, in the parish, which derived its name from that circumstance, is pointed out as the place of his retreat; and almost within the memory of man, games in honour of that saint were annually celebrated on his festival.

At the time of the Norman Conquest of England, this place was a small and unimportant fishing-village, which, from its situation at the mouth of the river Gwayn, was called, by the Welsh, Aber-Gwain. Soon after that period, an Anglo-Norman leader, named Martin de Tours, or de Turribus, whose services under the Conqueror had been rewarded by a grant of lands in Devonshire, on the coast of the Bristol Channel, being desirous of extending the limits of his possessions, fitted out an expedition to act against such part of the Welsh coast as he should find least prepared for defence; and having sailed round the south-western extremity of Pembrokeshire, he succeeded with little difficulty in landing his troops here, and in subduing the territory, which subsequently formed the ancient lordship of Kemmes, and one of the lordships marcher. In the subsequent partition of the conquered territories among his followers, Martin assigned the town of "Aber-Gwain," and nearly the whole of the district which is at present comprehended within the parish, to Jordan de Cantington, who introduced into his newly-acquired possessions an English colony. The name of the village was changed to Fish Garth, the latter word signifying in the Anglo-Saxon language a "weir;" and of this name the modern appellation of Fishguard is only a slight corruption. Jordan made repeated attempts to excite in his Welsh and English subjects sentiments of reciprocal conciliation, and peaceable subjection to his authority, but in these endeavours he was invariably frustrated by their mutual dissensions, and he finally gave the whole to the abbey of St. Dogmael's, which had been founded by his patron, Martin de Tours, in the vicinity, and in the possession of which it remained till the period of the general dissolution of religious houses.

The origin of the present town, or at least its elevation from an obscure and inconsiderable fishing village to some degree of importance, may be referred to the sixteenth century, when Newport, the head of the barony of Kemmes, being visited with a desolating pestilence, the inhabitants were driven from it and compelled to seek safety in all directions. Many of them, attracted by the open situation of the place, and the purity of its air, established themselves at Fishguard, which, from these advantages of its situation, had entirely escaped the contagion; and to this circumstance are usually ascribed the first increase and the present prosperity of the town, which, however, only obtained the privilege of a Market towards the close of the last century, through the exertions of the late William Knox, esq..

In the year 1797, a French force of about 1500 men, under the conduct of General Tate, effected a landing on this coast, within a few miles of the town; but after committing some ravages in the neighbourhood, they were made prisoners by the troops under Lord Cawdor. This event, though generally referred to Fishguard, took place in the adjoining parish of Llanwnda.

The town is beautifully situated on the river Gwayn, near its influx into St. George's Channel, and is divided into the Upper and Lower town, the former on the summit of a Hill commanding an extensive marine view, and the latter occupying the banks of the river, over which is a neat stone bridge of five arches. The Upper Town includes the principal portion, containing the Church, Market-place, and chief shops, and consisting mainly of three Streets, diverging from a common centre; partially paved, but formed of houses irregularly built and of indifferent appearance. Some improvements, however, have taken place, and a better style of building and greater regularity prevail in the houses of more modern erection. The inhabitants are abundantly supplied with water of excellent quality, and the springs are so numerous, that wherever the ground is opened, water is found at a small distance below the surface. The parish comprises an area of 3430 acres: the soil is tolerably fertile; the lands, with a trifling exception, are inclosed, and the greater portion is in a superior state of cultivation. The scenery is finely diversified, assuming in some parts a striking boldness of character and in others a pleasing combination of picturesque and romantic features. The situation of the town, upon a small bay in St. George's Channel to which it gives name, and the shores of which are distinguished for the beauty of their scenery; the salubrity of its atmosphere; the abundance and cheapness of the commodities brought to its Markets; and the facility for sea-bathing, contribute to render Fishguard desirable as a place of residence, and attract to it numerous visitors during the summer. As a proof of its salubrity, the number of aged inhabitants is, perhaps, greater than in any other place of equal population in the kingdom: from a return of the bills of mortality made by the vicar, in compliance with an order from government, from 1813 to 1830 inclusive, it was found that in every year of the above period there was a majority of persons from seventy to ninety, and often to one hundred, years of age.

Fishguard bay extends a distance of three miles in a direction from east to west, and about a mile and three-quarters from north to south, varying in depth of water from thirty to seventy feet, in proportion to the distance from the fine bold shore by which it is inclosed. The bottom is firm, affording good anchorage to ships of the largest size, which may ride in safety in all parts of the bay during the prevalence of gales from any point of the compass, except north and north-east.

According to a survey made by Mr. Spence, in 1790, by order of the Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty, this bay was reported to be the only place between Milford Haven and St. Tudwal's roads, off Carnarvonshire, where large vessels navigating the Irish Channel could at that time put in for shelter. The harbour, which is capacious and easy of access, is situated on the western side of the bay; it is irregular in form, being about 2400 feet in length, and about 1160 feet wide at the entrance, which is free from obstruction either from rocks or a bar. The erection of a pier, which was strongly recommended by the engineer who surveyed the bay, would greatly tend to improve it; and according to an estimate delivered by the engineer, a suitable pier might be completed, for the accommodation of 100 sail of Merchant-vessels of the usual class, at an expense of £14,785. The harbour was again surveyed, under the direction of the Lords of the Admiralty, by the late Mr. Rennie, who confirmed the preceding report, and recommended, in addition to the proposed pier from Fort Point, the construction of a breakwater from Cow and Calf Point. The expense of both these works, according to Mr. Rennie's estimate, would not exceed the sum of £80,000, and their construction would render the harbour one of the safest and most commodious on the coast for vessels of almost all descriptions. But in consequence of neither of the above plans being carried into effect, the prosperity of the place has been greatly retarded, and, owing to the very indifferent state of the present small pier, Fishguard has become much impoverished: while if its pier was in good repair, not only its own shipping, but vessels from other ports, were accustomed to put in and remain here, for a greater or less period, making Milford their port only as a matter of necessity. It was originally intended that Fishguard bay should be the terminus of the South Wales railway, but a deviation seems likely to be adopted, which will terminate at Abermawr, some miles distant from the town. A few particulars of the line are given under the heads of Pembrokeshire and Carmarthenshire, and a fuller account under that of Glamorganshire.

The trade, which is very inconsiderable, consists chiefly in the exportation of corn and butter to Bristol and Liverpool, and the importation of shop goods; of coal and culm from Milford and Swansea; coal from Newport, Cardiff, &c.; limestone from Milford; and timber. Some of the larger vessels belonging to the port are engaged in the general carrying-trade from Bristol, Liverpool, Milford and London, to Ireland, &c. The Irish packets and vessels bound for Liverpool, often put in here, when driven by stress of weather. The herring fishery, which formerly afforded employment to a considerable number of the inhabitants, becoming unproductive, has been some time discontinued, with the exception of procuring a supply for the immediate neighbourhood only. Lead-ore has been found within the parish, but not in sufficient quantity, nor of quality rich enough, to encourage any attempts to work it; slate of very good quality abounds in the neighbourhood, and iron-ore has been found near the town. The Market is on Thursday, and is well supplied with grain, and with provisions of every kind: an act for establishing a Market was obtained in 1834. The fairs are on February 5th, Easter-Monday, Whit Monday, July 23rd, and November 17th.

Fishguard is thought to have been anciently an incorporated borough, and is traditionally reported to have possessed a charter, granted by King John, which was lost during the great civil war of the seventeenth century; but the only officer appointed in the present day is a mayor, whose election is merely nominal, as there are now no burgesses, or other vestige of borough jurisdiction. This mayor, who is chosen from among the tenants of the manor, which formerly belonged to the crown, is selected by the Lord's steward, and submitted by him to the jury present, who, upon their oaths approving of the appointment, allow the candidate to be sworn in. There is a district in the parish still known by the name of "The borough," which is co-extensive with the manor. By the act of 1832, for "Amending the Representation of the People," the place is constituted a contributory borough with the boroughs of Haverfordwest and Narberth, in the return of a representative to parliament. The right of election is vested in every male person of full age occupying, either as owner, or as tenant under the same landlord, a house or other premises of the annual value of not less than £10, provided he be capable of registering as the act directs: the present number of tenements of this value within the limits of the borough, is sixty five. The sheriff of Haverfordwest is the returning officer. Fishguard is also one of the polling-places for the election of a knight for the shire.

The living is a discharged vicarage, rated in the King's Books at £4. 0. 5d., endowed with £200 royal bounty and £800 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of the Lord Chancellor; present net income, £111. The tithes have been commuted for £230 payable to J. Hughes, esq., and £70 payable to the vicar: there is a glebe of twelve acres, valued at £16 per annum. The Church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is pleasantly situated in the Upper Town, and is a neat small edifice, but not distinguished by any peculiarity of architecture. A handsome vicarage-house, called Vicar's Park, from the name of the plot of glebe on which it stands, has been erected by the present incumbent, the Rev. Samuel Fenton, M.A., which has much improved the entrance into the town from Haverfordwest. Fishguard, previously to the erection of the present Church, is said to have comprised two distinct parishes, now forming only one; and the ruins of three ancient Chapels, called respectively LlanVihangel, Llan-Vartin, and Llan-Ist, may still be traced: of these, two probably were parochial churches, and the third a Chapel of ease to one of them. There are places of worship for Baptists, Independents, and Calvinistic Methodists; and five Sunday schools, one of them in connexion with the Established Church.

The hills in this parish, inclosing the romantic Valle of Gwayn, were formerly thickly strewn with Druidical relics, of which several vestiges may still be traced.

Roman Coins

Near the site that was occupied by the ancient town called Caerau, three Roman urns have been found, containing numerous coins, of Gallienus, Posthumus, Claudius, and some other emperors; but the coins were melted down soon after their discovery.

In various parts of the parish are tumuli, some of which have been found to contain relics of the rudest ages, urns of the coarsest workmanship, implements of stone, bones, ashes, and curiously wrought stones. Near the town are several tumuli, or artificial mounds, intrenched as if for military purposes, and called Castellau, or, "the castles," probably from that circumstance: these Mr. Fenton supposes to be sepulchral monuments of a remote age, and to have been reduced to their present form, which is a truncated cone, and probably surmounted by forts, during the wars between the Welsh and the invading Saxons. On the bank of the river Gwayn, in a secluded and romantic situation, stands the neat mansion of the late Richard Fenton, esq., barrister at-law, and author of the "Historical Tour through Pembrokeshire;" it is pleasantly embosomed in a thick grove of trees, and is now the property and residence of his eldest son. Upon Fort Point, on the north-east of the town, is a battery, but the guns from disuse and neglect have become unserviceable. A mineral spring in the parish was formerly in high estimation for its efficacy in the cure of numbness of the limbs and other complaints.

1844 Fishguard Pigot & Co. South Wales directory

Is a Market-town and sea-port, in the parish of its name, hundred of Kemess, and county of Pembroke: 257 miles W. by N. from London, and 16 N from Haverfordwest, the like distance NE from St David's, and 7 W. from Newport; situated on a steep cliff on the seashore, at the influx of the river Gwaïne with the sea, which forms a spacious bay, where vessels may ride safely in five or six fathoms water. At this place Frenchmen landed in 1797, who surrendered, on the summons of Lord Cawdor, without firing a single shot.

The town is divided into two portions, the upper and lower town, by the river, over which is a good stone bridge of five arches. The upper town occupies the eminence, and includes the greater proportion of inhabitants, with the Church, Market-house, and principal shops: the lower part skirts the estuary and having sprung from its shipping and commerce within the last seventy years, is fast becoming a rival in trade and population to its more elevated neighbour.

With the exception of a little flannel weaving, no manufactures exist here - corn, butter and herrings, comprise its chief trade; the fishery however, of late years, has not been prosperous. Slate abounds in the neighbourhood, and of excellent quality; there is also iron ore near the town, but up to the present time no works have been established. There is no regular municipal government attached to Fishguard; but a head constable, with the title of mayor, is elected annually under the court leet, though his duties are not particularly defined. The manorial courts are held annually within the limits of the borough. Fishguard shares, with Haverfordwest and Narberth, in the elective franchise.

The Parish Church of the Virgin Mary is an old structure, presenting little worth notice. There are places of worship for Baptists, Independents and Calvinists: the living of Fishguard is a vicarage, in the gift of the Crown. Within a few miles of the town are several romantically situated seats, and the views from many points around are highly picturesque, from the undulating surface of the country, and the abrupt altitude of the sea-cliffs. The prospect inland includes Preselau, the loftiest mountain in this county, being one thousand eight hundred feet above the level of the sea; together with hills of inferior height, many crested with enormous masses of rock. The narrow Valle of Gwaen, including the grounds round Glyn Amel, is an interesting object to the tourist and the artist.

A New Market-house has been erected; the Market is held on Thursday; and the fairs on the 5th of February , Easter Monday, Whit Monday, the 8th and 9th of October, and the 17th and 18th of November. The parish contained, in 1831, 1,990 inhabitants; and at the last census (1841), 2,013. The outline of a Market place can be detected in the street patterns.

St Mary's Church - 1850 August 2 Glynne Arch Camb 1888

This very mean Church unworthy of a populous parish, is scarcely distinguishable from the adjacent houses, the walls are so very low, and the appearance insignificant. The walls are probably ancient, but the original character obliterated all the windows being modern, and the ceiling a flat one of plaster. The chancel arch is pointed, but somewhat modernised the interior filled with new pews. At the west end is a double Bell gable but only one Bell. The font octagonal, and seems modern.

1851 St Mary's Parish Church ".... and 6 large pews are huddled together in the Chancel...The Church is too small..." Thomas Richardson, Curate

The Fishguard parish Church was rebuilt entirely, and opened by the Right Rev Dr Thirlwall on the 22nd day of July 1857. The Church is built without any pillars; a large nave with an arched roof of massive timberwork. Any ordinary architect of the present day would have hesitated before he attempted to roof in a nave of 60ft by 40ft and 50ft high with only tiebeams in wood. Mr Clark, the architect, has thrown over it a series of circular arches coming down 7 ft below the wall plate were they rest on corbels as their ultimate points of support. Upon these arches he rests the principals of the roof, locking them together with iron bolts; and he thus carries the main thrust of the roof right down to the ground by means of corbels placed low, and strengthened by short external buttresses. The nave is divided by a massive arch. The chancel has a circular apse. The style of the architecture is that of the thirteenth century, which is to be seen in the old churches now in the southwest of France. The Church has always been admired for its stability and strength, and also for its simplicity, easy and suitable for divine service. Pembrokeshire Herald 24th July 1857 copied by Rev W Rowlands Vicar of Fishguard 29th Oct 1887

Present building dates from the 1857 but an earlier Church existed from c1300.

Nooks And Corners Of Pembrokeshire 1895 Timmins

The town of Fishguard hangs, as it were, upon the slope of a precipitous Hill overlooking the Valle of the Gwaen, which here, as George Owen puts it, ' falleth into the sea, making a faire Haven and goode Harborow for shippes and Barks.' Its waterside suburb of Abergwaen, approached by one of the steepest bits of coach road in the Principality, is mainly frequented by fisher-folk and seafaring men engaged in the coasting trade.

Usually the most easy-going of Sleepy Hollows, Fishguard town awoke one fine morning towards the close of the last century to find itself become suddenly famous. On February 21, 1797, three French frigates were sighted off the Pembrokeshire coast bearing up towards Fishguard Bay, where they presently came to anchor near Carreg Gwastad Point. During the ensuing night the enemy came ashore to the number of about 1,500 men, regular troops and gaol-birds, under the leadership of one Tate, a renegade Irish-American. Tate, with the chief of his satellites, established himself at the neighbouring farmhouse of TreHowel, while the main body of the ' invaders ' encamped atop of an isolated Hill overlooking the village of Llanwnda. Thence the Frenchmen dispersed about the country-side, scaring the inhabitants out of their wits, and rummaging the farmhouses in search of potheen and plunder.

In one of these exploits a drunken fellow entered a cottage at Brestgarn, where a ' grandfather ' clock happened to be standing in a corner. Dismayed by the sounds issuing from the mysterious object, the simpleton fired his gun at a venture, concluding the devil must be lurking within. This clock is still to be seen at Brestgarn, with the bullet-hole through the panel

Meanwhile the authorities bestirred themselves. Under the command of Lord Cawdor, the Fishguard Fencibles and Castle Martin Yeomanry marched out to Goodwich Sands, where the enemy, finding the game was up, laid down their arms and surrendered a discretion. Thus these doughty regiments achieved the unique distinction of facing a foreign foe on the soil of Britain itself. It is said that the goodwives of Pembrokeshire, arrayed in their red woollen ' whittles,' countermarched and deployed around a neighbouring Hill, thus leading the invaders to suppose that a regiment of gallant redcoats was preparing to oppose their advance.

The French prisoners were subsequently lodged in durance vile at a place near Pembroke, whence some of them affected their escape in Lord Cawdor's yacht, with the connivance of two Pembroke lasses— the old story of chcr- chcz la femme once more. One of the French vessels having been afterwards captured was re-christened the Fishguard, a name that has only recently disappeared from the files of the Navy List.

Incredible as it may seem in these days, the news of this famous event took a whole week to travel to the Metropolis, and it is said that the anniversary- of the French landing is still held in remembrance amongst the old folk in the locality.

The Parish Church Dedicated to St Mary the Virgin

The Church was rebuilt in the year 1857, and contains nothing of antiquarian interest. The font is modern. Sir Stephen Glynne describes the previous building as "very mean, scarcely distinguishable from the adjacent houses, the walls are so very low". (Arch Camb 1888 p130).

Inscribed Stone

In the churchyard is an erect stone 5ft in height, bearing a plain cross with trifoliated terminal to each arm. Beneath the arms are the letters David Medd and round the sides of the stone is an inscription. The whole doubtless commemorating David Meddus (or Mendus) who was vicar in 1535 (Valor Eccl). The stone is probably one of the latest examples of a pre Reformation memorial, and should be brought under cover. Visited 17th June 1915.

Fishguard (S. Mary). —The parish Church of Fishguard was rebuilt in 1855 during the incumbency of the Rev. William Rowlands who was of the family of the celebrated Rowlands of Llangeitho. Nothing is known of the disposition of the old Communion vessels. There is now a Chalice with its cover bearing the Hall marks of 1786 and the maker's Mark C H. The bowl is of the form of an inverted cone and is decorated with the sacred monogram within rays. Inscription "Poculum de Ecclesiae St, Mary Fishguard," It measures 6 in. in height; diam. of bowl, 3 in.; depth, 3 in.; weight with cover 8 oz. Upon the handle or foot of the cover is engraved the date "1790". Like the chalice, the cover is decorated with a band of beaded moulding;

A Chalice which is of parcel-gilt is a modern reproduction of the medieval pattern and carries the Hall Mark of 1893. The maker's Mark being SB FW. The plain bowl rests on a hexagonal stem which is divided by a knop. One of the six compartments of the base is decorated with a cross. It measures 8 in. in height; diam. of bowl, 3 in.; depth, 3 in.;

A Paten bearing the date letter of 1892 and the same maker's Mark, measures 5in. in diam., and weighs 3 oz. 7 dwts. Both chalice and paten were given in memory of Lizzy Smyth Lewis who died Easter, April 1893, and Hannah Sarah Bennett who died Feb, 3rd 1893, by their respective Husbands Mr. Robert Lewis and Mr. T. G. Bennett, Churchwardens.

Chalice, Flagon and two Patens, all of plated metal. Each piece is decorated with the sacred monogram. One of the Patens carries the following inscription " Presented to Letitia Maria Harries, By the Vicar. Teachers and Friends of the Fishguard National Schools as a token of regard and approval of her unwearied exertions in the cause of Education. March 23, 1839 ". In the centre of the plate is the sacred symbol beneath which is inscribed " Presented to St. Mary's Church by Letitia Maria Harries In humble gratitude to Almighty God for His goodness vouchsafed to the Fishguard National Schools, Mar. 33rd 1859 ".

Two glass Cruets with silver mountings, presented by the Rev. R. Lloyd Lloyd, Vicar (1894-1900).

By a recent donation this parish possesses a Paten which is the only piece of Gold Plate in the County. It bears the London Hall marks of 1904 and was made by Messrs. Barkentin & Krall of Regent Street. It is interesting as being an exact reproduction of the Paten found at St Davids Cathedral in 1874 in the grave of Bishop Thomas Beck (1380-1293). It measures 4 in. in diameter and is of 18 carat gold.'

The present Chapel, dated 1845, is built in the Sub-Classical style with a gable-entry plan, half-hipped roof, two storeys and flat-headed windows surmounted by blind fan-heads to both storeys. The central door with is fanlight over, has a gabled surround housing a datestone inscribed 'Tabernacle Independant Chapel 1845'. The interior however dates from a complete refurbishment started in 1915, but due to the First World War not completed until 1924. The gallery front is ornately decorated with Neo-18th century detail, fashioned both from hardwood and plaster of paris moulded to match the more expensive material. The pulpit is a half round projection on a semi-octagonal base, detailed with columns and classical motifs and accessed by stairs to either side. The later work on 1924 included the insertion of the pipe Organ to the rear of the pulpit. Tabernacl is now Grade 2 Listed for its distinctive richly ornamented interior. Still open Dec 2006

Pentowr Chapel (Welsh Calvinistic Methodist; Pentour; Tower Hill), Tower Hill, Fishguard

Pentour Methodist is a long-wall Chapel originating in 1759, rebuilt in 1788, 1806 and again in 1824. In 1889 the Chapel was remodelled for £1200 by architect D E Thomas of Haverfordwest, in conjunction with the Tenby based builder William Davies, and a schoolroom added in 1890 by Thomas Harries of Trellan. Early ministers included John Dafydd (1765), Thomas Davies (1790) and David Jones (1794). By 1802 the membership was recorded as 80, during that year the Chapel was granted the right to hold baptism and communion services and by 1810 membership had risen to 200. During the revival in 1859 30 new members are recorded, but when Philip Jones started as minister in 1886 members are recorded at 100. In 1901 a cemetery was bought and four years later a manse was constructed on land donated by D Jones, a future MP for the county. During the period 1917-1938 J T Job was minister, who as a poet won Chair at the National Eisteddfod in 1897, 1903 and 1918 and the Crown in 1900.

The stuccoed front façade is lateral entry and the two end doors hidden by porches linked by a veranda supported by two cast iron columns. A central pair of round-headed windows with Florentine tracery is matched by a single gallery window over each porch, and a small glazed, roundel is set above the pair. The interior escaped re-orientation during the 1889 renovation, the pulpit is still to the front wall, although now with a later Organ inserted behind it and blocking the central pair of windows. The three sided gallery is of pitch pine with pierced cast iron panels inset to the front and supported by cast iron columns. To the front of the Chapel has a narrow courtyard separated from the road by a low stuccoed wall set with cast iron railings.

Pentour is now Grade 2 Listed RCAHMW, July 2010

The Last Invasion Of Britain

After the outbreak of war between Britain and France in 1793, General Lazare Hoche decided to take the war onto British soil. In 1796 he planned a full Scale invasion of Ireland, which would be supported by the United Irishmen. An expedition of 15,000 men was organised and to prevent British reinforcements being sent to Ireland and to create panic on the mainland two smaller expeditions were planned.

A force would cross the North Sea, land in the northeast, win the support of the working classes and March across northern England to Lancashire. Here they would link up with a smaller expedition, which would either have attacked Bristol or, failing that, would have landed in Cardigan Bay and threatened Liverpool. It was predicted that the Welsh and English working classes, like their Irish counterparts, would rise in the name of Liberty.

In December 1796, Hoche's expedition arrived in Bantry Bay in Ireland but was scattered by atrocious weather and limped back into Brest. A combination of poor weather and indiscipline had also put paid to the northern expedition. But what of the other expedition?

Preparations went ahead in Brest but with the failure of the Irish invasion it is difficult to see why it set sail at all. Equally strange was the choice of its leader, a little known American of Irish descent called William Tate from South Carolina. He had fought against Britain in the American War of Independence. However, after that war he became deeply embroiled in French plans to capture New Orleans and fell foul of the American authorities. In 1795 he fled to Paris, hoping to be reimbursed for his expenses and demanding confirmation of his rank. Hoche thought that Tate was the right man to lead the Bristol expedition.

Most of the soldiers were kitted out from a stock of British uniforms which had been captured earlier. But these would only take dark Brown dye so La Seconde Legion des Francs became known as "La Legion Noir" or the "Black Legion." The force of over 1,200 men consisted of a mixture of republicans, deserters, royalist prisoners and grenadiers and they were very well armed. Some of the officers were Irish.

The quality of the four ships under Commodore Castagnier was impressive. Le Vengeance and La Resistance were two of the largest and newest French frigates; the latter was on her maiden voyage. The corvette La Constance and the lugger Vautour were also new. Castagnier's instructions were to head for Irish waters after disembarking the soldiers.

Hoche's instructions undoubtedly asked far too much of this expedition. Having burnt Bristol, Britain's second largest city, the force was to land on the Welsh side of the Bristol Channel or failing this, in Cardigan Bay and then make for Chester or Liverpool.

Apart from this, the working classes were to be encouraged to rebel; Britain's trade was to be dislocated and French prisoners of war liberated, causing such chaos as to make the invasion of Britain possible. Hoche warned Tate that he should not risk battle unless it was absolutely essential, since the enemy would have superior forces.

The squadron left Brest on 16th February 1797. Flying Russian colours they lurked around Lundy, sinking a few small craft while waiting for a suitable tide to take them to Bristol. Skillfully using the tides to reach Porlock, Castagnier was finally forced to abandon the project because of adverse winds. The inhabitants of Ilfracombe sounded the alarm as they passed and the local volunteers were mobilised. Following instructions, Tate now insisted on making for Cardigan Bay. But there had been several sightings of them and the authorities had been alerted.

By noon on Wednesday 22nd February, Castagnier was spotted rounding St Davids Head in Pembrokeshire, flying British colours. At 4 p.m. the French anchored in perfect weather off Carreg Wastad, a rocky headland three miles west of Fishguard. By 2 a.m. on Thursday 23rd February, 17 boatloads of troops, 47 barrels of powder, 50 tons of cartridges and grenades and 2,000 stands of arms had been brought ashore. This was indeed a magnificent feat. A company of grenadiers under Irishman, Lieutenant St. Leger rushed a mile inland and took over TreHowel Farm, which became Tate's headquarters. La Seconde Legion des Francs had succeeded in making the last landing by enemy soldiers on the British mainland.

When one of the French ships entered Fishguard Bay to reconnoitre, Fishguard Fort fired a blank shot. Whether this was the customary signal to a visiting British vessel or the alarm for the Fishguard Volunteers, it saved Fishguard! The ship promptly hoisted the French tricolour and sailed away to rejoin the others. Although Fishguard Fort had eight nine-pounders, there were only three rounds in the magazine and the small port could have easily been taken.

With the loss of the American colonies in 1783, the last Under-Secretary of State, William Knox, decided in 1784 to purchase estates in Pembrokeshire and his mansion at Llanstinan was only 4 miles from Fishguard. When the Government called for volunteers in the war against the French, Knox raised the Fishguard and Newport Volunteer Infantry in 1794, one of the earliest in the kingdom. Having raised four companies, totalling nearly three hundred men, it was the largest force in the county and his son, Thomas Knox, was appointed Lieutenant Colonel. At the time of the French landing, Knox was 28 years old with no combat experience. He was attending a social function at Tregwynt Mansion when news of a suspected enemy landing was brought to him. Initially he gave it little credence but as the seriousness of the situation dawned on him he instructed his Newport Division to march the seven miles to his headquarters at Fishguard Fort.

Lord Cawdor was 30 miles away at Stackpole Court in the far south of the county when he received the news. He had been commissioned captain of the Castlemartin Troop of the Pembroke Yeomanry Cavalry, which fortunately was assembled for a funeral on the following day. He immediately mobilised all the troops at his disposal and crossed the Pembroke Ferry with the Pembroke Volunteers and the Cardiganshire Militia. Once across, Cawdor went ahead and met Lord Milford the Lord Lieutenant of the county, who delegated full authority to him.

Most of the credit for gathering about 400 soldiers and sailors at Haverfordwest was due to the energy of Lieutenant Colonel Colby of the Pembrokeshire Militia. Having summoned the troops to Haverfordwest, he had galloped the sixteen miles to Fishguard to assess Knox's situation. Satisfied that Knox was taking appropriate measures, he returned to Haverfordwest to supervise the arrival of the local forces. Captain Longcroft of the navy brought in the press gangs and the crews of two revenue cutters at Milford totalling about 150 sailors. Nine cannons were brought ashore, of which six were placed in Haverfordwest Castle, and the others brought along. Due to Colby's exertions the force under Cawdor set off at noon, 23rd February from the Castle Inn, Haverfordwest to reinforce Knox, who was facing the French at Fishguard with his Fishguard Volunteers.

Knox had declared his intention of attacking the following day if he was not heavily outnumbered. Colby wrote later that he had suggested placing troops on the heights opposite the French to discourage them from moving until reinforcements arrived. Knox denied this but had sent out scouting parties to assess the French strength.

The French had moved a further two miles inland and occupied two strong defensive positions at Garnwnda and Garngelli, high rocky outcrops giving an unobstructed view of the surrounding countryside. Thus far all had gone well for Tate and his force.

On the morning of 23rd February, a hundred of Knox's men had still not arrived and he soon learned that he was facing an enemy of over 1200 men, who could have been seasoned veterans. This was a different proposition to the skirmishing role of their training. Although many inhabitants were fleeing the area in panic, hundreds of civilians were flocking into the area armed with a variety of crude weaponry.

Poor Knox faced a dilemma - to attack, to defend Fishguard, or to retreat towards his reinforcements, which he knew would be moving towards him from Haverfordwest. He decided to retreat slowly towards Haverfordwest. He gave orders to spike the Fort's cannons (which the Woolwich Bombadiers refused to carry out) and at about 9 a.m. he set off, sending out scouts to keep watch on the French. The Defence Committee at Haverfordwest agreed with this decision, which was to have grave repercussions for Knox later. Fishguard was now completely at Tate's mercy.

Knox and his 194 men met the reinforcements led by Lord Cawdor and Colby at Trefgarne, 8 miles from Fishguard at 1.30 p.m. Colby was surprised to see him. After a short dispute Cawdor was accepted as Commander-in-Chief and he led the British forces back towards Fishguard.

By 5 p.m. the force had arrived within a mile of Fishguard and Cawdor decided to attack.

Considering the darkness, this was indeed risky to say the least.

The 600 men, dragging their cannons, marched up the narrow Trefwrgi Lane, with its high hedges, towards the French position on Garngelli. But a French advance party, under Irishman Lieutenant St. Leger, had prepared an ambush. A volley poured into the tightly compressed column at point blank range would have resulted in heavy casualties. Boxed into the lane, the force was in a potential death trap. Seemingly oblivious to this, Cawdor decided to withdraw to Fishguard, since they were losing their bearings in the darkness, and avoided the ambush awaiting him by a few hundred yards. So the force prepared to spend the night in Fishguard and the officers were based in today's Royal Oak Inn.

However, Tate's fortunes had changed. Many of his foraging parties had resorted to pillaging the local farms and Llanwnda Church. Indiscipline was getting out of hand with examples of mutinous men threatening their officers. It became obvious to Tate that the local Welsh peasants were hostile to his force of 'liberators' and six peasants and soldiers had been killed in clashes. Many of the Irish officers were counselling surrender, realising what would be in store for them if hostilities continued. The departure of Castagnier's squadron as planned for Ireland had shocked and demoralised the men who had seen their escape route vanish over the horizon.

There is strong evidence that the French were deceived by the appearance in the neighbourhood of large numbers of local womenfolk wearing the traditional dress of red shawls and black hats, which at a distance resembled infantry uniforms. It is certain that inhabitants over a wide area were flocking towards Fishguard to attack the enemy. The formidable local cobbler, Jemima Nicholas, captured a dozen demoralised French soldiers and secured them in St. Mary's Church.

That evening, two French delegates arrived at the Royal Oak to negotiate a conditional surrender and Tate wrote:

To the Officer commanding His Britannic Majesty's Troops. 5th. year of the Republic. The Circumstances under which the Body of the French Troops under my Command were landed at this Place renders it unnecessary to attempt any military operations, as they would tend only to Bloodshed and Pillage. We therefore desire to enter into a Negotiation upon Principles of Humanity for surrender. If you are influenced by similar Considerations you may signify the same and, in the meantime, Hostilities shall cease. Health and Respect, Tate.

But Cawdor with magnificent bluff replied that with the superior numbers at his command, which were increasing hourly, he would only accept an unconditional surrender and gave an ultimatum of 10 a.m. the following morning, otherwise the French would be attacked.

On the following morning the British force was lined up in battle-order on the high ground overlooking Goodwick, reinforced by hundreds of civilians from all parts of the county, to await Tate's response. Tate, however, accepted the terms and finally after some delay, at 2 p.m. Friday 24th. February 1797, with drums beating but without their banners, the French marched down to Goodwick Beach where they stacked their weapons. At 4 p.m. the French prisoners were marched through Fishguard on their way to temporary imprisonment in Haverfordwest. Later a group of prisoners made a daring escape from the Golden Prison in Pembroke by stealing Cawdor's yacht! Meanwhile, Cawdor had ridden to TreHowel Farm and received Tate's surrender, although the document has been lost. After his surrender and brief imprisonment in Portsmouth, Tate was returned to France in a prisoner exchange in 1798. He was involved in bitter wrangling with the French authorities and was last mentioned in 1809 when he probably sailed back to America. Castagnier had sent Vautour back to France with his dispatches. En route to Ireland the squadron sank eleven ships but they dallied too long in Irish waters and La Constance, helping La Resistance, crippled by storm damage were intercepted by two British frigates and were captured. La Resistance was renamed H.M.S. Fisgard. Castagnier, aboard Le Vengeance, made it safely into Brest.

Undoubtedly Cawdor was the hero of the hour. He, Knox and others were congratulated, received the royal gratitude from George III and countless local honours. However, a whispering campaign started against Knox. Accused of cowardice and poor judgement his name was ruined and eventually he challenged his accuser, Cawdor, to a duel, which was probably not fought.

In 1853 Lord Palmerston conferred upon the Pembroke Yeomanry the battle honour 'Fishguard.' This regiment has the unique honour of being the only one in the British Army, regular or territorial, that bears the name of an engagement on British soil and it was the first battle honour to be awarded to any volunteer unit.

The French Invasion.

It was just towards the close of the last century that one of the most interesting and mysterious occurrences that ever disturbed the people of this county, and especially of Haverfordwest, took place—I mean "the French Landing at Fishguard," as we have been accustomed to hear it called. The event has long since passed into the region of history; but some of the scenes in it in the immediate vicinity—as I have gathered them from the lips, of the folks who well remember them I should like if I were able to describe, as they deserve to be. It was in the month of February 1797, which country people used to say was the hottest weather ever known at that season of the year farmers sowing corn being obliged to suspend work at mid-day, on account of the extreme heat that the event happened. None now survive who were old enough at the time to notice all the surroundings: but, say forty years ago, there were many people with whom one could converse about it. Without any previous warning of impending peril, the tidings shot through the county "The French have landed at Fishguard!" As the event turned out, there was little to be frightened at; but this was not discovered till afterwards. But the amazing heroism of them, and their patriotism, were some of the grand things in connection with it. One incident I just remember, and I had it from the mouth of a bystander. A woman rushed out into the little garden, where her husband was busily preparing the ground for potatoes, and exclaimed in a voice of terror, "John Bowen, John Bowen, the French have landed at Fishguard!" Throwing down his spade, declaring he was not going to do work for the French, he went into his house, and, reaching down an old fowling piece he happened to have, then and there he started out without any more ado to meet the invaders.

At Nolton a village about six miles from Haverfordwest, where there lived an aged Clergyman, the Rev Moses Grant grandfather of the late Lord Milford I read the record in the parish register there, and I assure my readers, with a thrill of interest, all the able-bodied men immediately left their homes for the scene of the expected conflict; and the Parson writes: "I assembled all the women and children in the Church, and we commended ourselves to the protection of Almighty God." When the alarm subsided, the enemy, who proved to be a miserable and contemptible force, were speedily disarmed, and marched as prisoners to Haverfordwest, where nothing but pity and compassion was displayed. Poor, starving wretches, as they were, the townspeople out vied each other in ministering to their necessities. They were, of course, imprisoned; but in the parish Church of St Mary, most of them. So much for this marvel, a matter which became the central epoch of a couple of generations—I mean in the way of a local calendar—just, as the Norman Conquest still stands in English history. The date when a marriage or birth or death took place in a family would be fixed very commonly by its chronological relation to the landing of the French at Fishguard. After a while the captured foreigners were released on their parole; and a lady told me the other day she had heard her father talk of one of them with whom he had often had a game of bowls at the bowling-Green in front of our Castle. He was here known as M. Bertrand, but became the attached and faithful companion of Napoleon Bonaparte in his exile, and was with him at his death in St. Helena.

As is always the case after such an occurrence, numberless stories were circulated in reference to the affair.

One report was, that when the commander of the French force discovered the want of strategy displayed by the officer in command of the forces who disputed his advance inland, in afterwards placing his troops between the naked cliffs and the foe, whence they might have been easily swept, he gnashed his teeth, and declared, had he known his incapacity, he never would have surrendered. Another story was, that when the French saw what appeared to be the immense number of troops on the heights, where the Welsh women, clad in bright scarlet 'whittles' (a local name for shawls), showed up, they were seized with panic, and called on their officers to surrender. The only forces available on the spot were the Castle Martin Yeomanry led by Lord (afterwards Earl) Cawdor, and to them was granted the distinction of having the word "Fishguard" inscribed on their standard and on their uniform, as the troops which were engaged at Waterloo have that never forgotten name inscribed on theirs.

Some interesting evidence of the patriotic part Haverfordwest men played when the French landed at Fishguard was discovered in recent years amongst some papers in the offices of Messrs Eaton Evans and Williams, Solicitors of Haverfordwest, in the form of an old Moore's Diary for 1797. The diary has endorsed on it, "James Jones of the parish of St Martins in the Town and County of Haverfordwest Gent." Among the entries are the following:

1797 Feby. 22nd "1400 French landed at Pencare," do 23rd. "Went with Lord Cawdor's Cavalry, part of the Cardigan Militia, Fishguard and Pembroke Fencibles, and about 300 Haverfordwest Volontiers, in the whole about 800 armed men to attack the French, but did not come to battle. Night coming on, rendezvoused at Fishguard that night at nine."

do 24th "At about 2 p.m. the French surrendered prisoners of war and laid down their arms on Goodick sand, and marched into Haverfordwest that night by 12 o'clock." do 25th "A few prisoners with 5 officers brought in and 36 officers marched off for England."

do 26th "5 officers sent off for England."

do 27th "658 prisoners embark at Milford for England."

"Mr J. Thomas taken up and imprisoned for High Treason. Hope he'll be shot if guilty."

do 24th (an additional note)

"At the time of the surrender of the French, on a moderate calculation, there were 43000 men women and children in and near Fishguard, among which there were at least 8000 armed, viz 2000 with fire arms, the others with Pikes, Picks, Scythes, and other weapons."

[The foregoing is a literal copy of Mr Jones' entries with the quaint spelling unaltered].

Acc/to Journal 1885 Vol XLI of the Congress of British Archaeological Society

1797 Feb 17th a force sailed from Brest consisting of a lugger and a corvette escorted by two frigates containing several hundred released jailbirds and galley slaves under the command of an American adventurer named Colonel Tate ordered by the Directory to land and "burn Bristol the second city in England for riches and commerce" and thereafter to land in Wales, March across the mountains and do the same to Chester and Liverpool.

The raiders sailed into the Bristol Channel and turned tail when they saw what they thought was a warship (it was the Dublin packet boat) then went to Fishguard where they anchored on Feb 22nd

The force landed in a rocky cove below Carregwastad Point

The vessels had been sighted, and the alarm raised.. Lord Cawdor mustered the Castlemartin Yeomanry, Cardigan Militia and Fishguard Volunteers (Local militia units) and they marched seaward from the village of Llanwnda followed, it is said, by the women of the area wearing their red cloaks. Although the French outnumbered the militia 3 to 1 on seeing the advancing militia Colonel Tate ordered his men to stand firm then went forward and surrendered himself and his army to Lord Cawder unconditionally "upon principles of humanity". The main problem of the volunteers was preventing the enraged Welsh villagers from cutting the throats of the French prisoners as they were marched off to jail.

Acc/to Roger Worsley.

25 of the imprisoned French captured after the invasion at Fishguard "chatted up" some girls in Pembroke and enlisted their aid in escaping. Two local girls Eleaner Martin and Ann Beach fell for some of the French and helped them escape. The French dug a tunnel and the girls took away the spoil in yoked tubs pretending it to be sewage. The tunnel was over 60yds long. They all then got away by stealing the yacht belonging to Lord Cawder.

Fifty Six years later Queen Victoria awarded the battle honour "Fishguard" to the Yeomanry, and it remains the only one given to a British Army unit for opposition to an enemy force within the British Isles. The Pembroke Yeomanry also has battle honours for: "South Africa, 1901" "Egypt, 1916/17", "Gaza", "Jerusalem, "Jericho", Tel Asur", "Palestine, 1917-18", Somme, 1918", Bapaume 1918", "Hindenburg Line", "Epehy", "Pursuit to Mons" and "France and Flanders, 1918".

Bowen John 1858 Bishop of Sierra Leone, the son of Captain Thomas , Bowen of the 85th Foot, was born at Court, near Fishguard, Pembrokeshire, and educated at Haverfordwest. He sailed for Canada, and farmed land at Danville, on the shores of Lake Erie, for seven years, returning to Wales in 1842. He entered himself at Trinity College, Dublin, and graduated B.A- in 1847, and LL.B. and LL.D. ten years later. He was ordained priest in 1847. He inherited considerable property after an uncle died, and this enabled him to devote himself to missionary work, Under the auspices of the Church of England Missionary Society he visited Jerusalem, Syria, Cairo, Mogul, Smyrna, and other centres. In 1857 he was consecrated Bishop of Sierra Leone, and sailed for his diocese in November of that year, but the deadly climate claimed him as a victim in about 18 months afterwards, and he died at Freetown, the capital of the colony, on 28th May, 1858 Eminent Welshmen

Fenton Richard 1746-1821 the author, was born at St David's Pembrokeshire, and received his early education at the Cathedral School. He subsequently entered the Middle Temple, and there studied for the legal profession. He afterwards practised at the Irish, English, and Welsh, bar, both in North and South Wales. During his stay in the Metropolis he met Dr. Johnson, and was on intimate terms with Goldsmith and David Garrick. He was a good Greek, Latin, and French scholar. The last twenty or thirty years of his life were devoted to literary pursuits. He was a very intimate friend of Sir Richard Hoare, at whose suggestion he undertook and published his "Historical Tour through Pembrokeshire," London, 1810, a work of high character, containing much interesting information. He also wrote "A Tour in quest of Genealogy," 1811, 8vo. and the "Memoirs of an Old Wig," both of which were published Anonymously He also wrote a very caustic reply to the strictures of Dr. Burgess, Bishop of St David's on his "Historical Tour." An "Index to the Historical Tour," compiled by Henry Owen, was published in 1894. He is described by one who knew him as "a man of indefatigable industry, of a fine poetical fancy, of a very cheerful disposition, of particularly gentlemanly and fascinating manner, and a person of the best information, almost on every subject, he ever knew." He married the daughter of Fillet David, a Swiss military officer, the personal friend of the second duke of Marlborough, who brought him over, and induced him to settle in this country. By her he had a family who survived him. He died at the age of seventy-five, in November, 1821, and was buried at Manorowen near Fishguard. -- Eminent Welshmen – R Williams

Nicholas Jemima 1797 reputed to have rounded up a group of Frenchmen with a pitchfork
H.L. Williams, who was present as a member of the Fishguard Volunteers, writing his memoirs describe her actions: "On her approach she saw in a field, about twelve Frenchmen; undaunted she advanced to them, and whether alarmed at her courage, or persuaded by her, she conducted them to and confined them in, the guard house in Fishguard Church," Early accounts place this in a field in the Henner area, above Goodwick.
 In 1832, the Vicar of Saint Mary's, Samuel Fenton, noted on her burial record: "This woman was called Jemima Fawr or Jemima the Great from her heroine acts, she having marched against the French who landed hereabout in 1797 and being of such personal powers as to be able to overcome most men in a fight. I recollect her well. She followed the trade of a shoemaker and made me, when a little boy, several pairs of shoes."

The State of Education in Wales 1847

Parish of Fishguard This is a maritime parish, and the people are somewhat divided in employment accordingly. Labourers in the town of Fishguard get 9d a day and their food; in the country about 4d(?) per day with their food and other perquisites; from 1s to 1s 6d per day on their own finding. The earnings of the Quay porters could hardly be estimated. There were 8 boats belonging to the town. The fishing was mainly done by the women. The landed proprietors are not resident. The principal one Sir James Cockburn had offered a site for a national school, but no active steps had been taken towards establishing one at the time of my visit. I did not find a single school of public institution for the poor in the place. The rising generation were said in general to be able to read Welsh. The registers were mostly signed with a Mark. The Vicar during my stay, kindly ascertained the following particulars respecting children in various parts of the parish who were attending no school at all between the ages of 3 and 12 years of age, a total of 163. He considered that in any plan of education it would be necessary to bear in mind the very short period during which the parents could afford to let their children remain at school. Wm Morris Assistant

Mr Barzey's school Market Street. The schoolroom is a small room in the master's dwelling house. The furniture consists of three desks and five benches but there are no maps. The master was ill and unable to attend school, and the scholars were not present. The scholars are principally mariners, mechanics, and small tradesmens children Some copybooks were well written 22nd January 1847 Wm Morris Assistant

Miss Evan's School Tower Hill The mistress lives with her parents. The schoolroom is in their house. The furniture consisted of two tables and five benches – no maps or prints. The mistress spoke English very correctly. The scholars are the children of tradesmen and mechanics. Only one little boy, learning Fennings Spelling Book, was present this afternoon. January 22 1847 Wm Morris Assistant.

Miss Griffiths School, Hottipas. The late father of the mistress used to keep this school. The room is well adapted for school purposes: but the floor, walls, windows and part of the roof are in bad repair. It is well lighted. The furniture consisted of four desks and seven benches. The mistress spoke English correctly; she teaches fancy needlework. The second chapter of St Matthew was read, and three scholars could answer the questions proposed by the mistress from the chapter correctly. The one present in arithmetic reduced £20 16s 6 ½ d to farthings very quickly and calculated 20 lbs at 11d correctly -- January 22nd 1847 Wm Morris Assistant

Mr Griffiths School Main Street. The schoolroom is a small room in the master's dwelling house. In the room are one master's desk, three desks fastened round the walls, one chair, and seven benches. Mechanics and mariners children were the scholars; few were present. They read part of the fourth chapter of St John's Gospel – only one read with ease. The master said they were not used to be questioned on their reading, as they were of different religious denominations. The copy books were indifferently written. January 22nd 1847 Wm Morris Assistant

Mr Jones's School, Lower Town The schoolroom is part of a dwelling house. It contained three desks and six benches in bad repair.

The master said “They learns the Church Catechism as soon as they comes to read”. The few scholars are children of mariners and labourers – None were present.

Mr Rees's school near the Baptist Chapel. The schoolroom is the property of the Baptist Congregation, for which Mr Rees pays a yearly rent. The building is in good repair and well lighted. The furniture consists of six desks, a master's desk, and eight benches, but no maps of any description or prints were hanging on the walls. The only maps which the scholars see are those which are in the geographical books used in the school. The master was brought up in Carmarthen Presbyterian College, and has devoted his whole life to the duties of a schoolmaster. His pupils are the children of respectable farmers and tradesmen, but few of them had returned since the Christmas vacation.

The 1st and 2nd Psalm were read but few with ease. They answered the questions proposed by the master from the Psalms tolerably well, and some others on common facts of Scripture history. In arithmetic most problems were worked out correctly. Only one present was learning grammar and answered questions with great correctness. Some of the copy books were fairly written. 22nd January 1847 Wm Morris Assistant.

Mr Vaughans School, Lower Town. The room in which this school is held is a part of a Chapel formerly used by the Wesleyans: the other part is used by a carpenter, and there is a wooden partition dividing it. It contains two large tables and seven benches but neither maps nor prints. The master could not speak English. The scholars are mariners and small tradesmen's children, and there were two adults in school but one of them did not answer a single question on any subject. The 2nd chapter of Acts was read. No answers could be had to the questions proposed. In arithmetic the third class answered the questions set correctly. Some of the copy books were tolerably well written. 22nd January 1847 Wm Morris Assistant.

Church Sunday School. On the 17th of January I visited the above school. The school was held in the Church. The first class I visited was reading the second chapter of Acts of the Apostles. All the class read English with ease. The mode of questioning was chiefly putting the verse verbatim into an interrogative form. The other two classes read out of the third Class Book, The one class read with great difficulty, indeed it was little better than spelling and the young ladies who were the teachers told me that it was useless to put questions in any other form. David Lewis Assistant Calvinistic Methodist Sunday School. On the 17th of January I visited the above school. It was held in the Calvinistic Methodist Chapel .One of the classes I visited was reading the 15th chapter of Deuteronomy. They all read Welsh very correctly. The mode of questioning adopted by the teacher was merely putting the verse verbatim into and interrogative form. I visited the classes all round and found the same system pursued. The teachers all informed me that this was the mode of questioning always adopted. —David Lewis Assistant

Sites of Interest - Fishguard

Y Caerau RCAM

Roman Remains

“Near the site which was formerly occupied by the ancient town of Caerau, three Roman urns have been found, containing numerous coins but they were melted down soon after their discovery”

(Lewis Top Dict 1833)

The Pem Arch Survey (1896-1907) records that “ very slight traces can be found at at Y Caerau but Dr Owen Pughe states that “extensive foundations of old walls could be traced in his day”. The word “Caerau” enters into the names of several fields in the immediate vicinity – Visited 10th June 1915.

Earthwork RCAM

About 600 yds due south of Cilshafe, and close to the eastern boundary of the parish is a much worn circular enclosure, now scarcely visible above the level. So far as it's faint outline permissible of measurement, it seems to have had a circumference of 150 ft, and probably only a single bank. The position of the entrance cannot be determined. Possibly it is the remains of an early cattle enclosure – Visited 7th September 1920

Castle Murtach RCAM

About 100 yds south of Fishguard vicarage , on the right of the high road leading to Haverfordwest, are the faint traces of an earthwork marked “Castell” on the 6in Ordnance sheet of which no further description can now be given. Cultivation has practically wiped it out: a slight rise in the ground may Mark its enclosing bank. When seen in 1870 there was visible “a square with rounded corners, 38 by 40yds on fairly level ground. Trench only on East side” It is bounded by a narrow lane called “Feidr Castell” the Castle Lane. The field on which it stands is known as “Castell Murtach” and an adjacent cottage is called “ Castell” About 600 yds south of the site are several fields which doubtless were formerly one enclosure , bearing the name “Parc Castell Murtach – Visited 3rd June 1915

Castle Point RCAM

In the Cambrian Register for 1795 is the statement that “ There is a place in the town of Fishguard, called in old deeds Y Castell”, and which from its situation on a small tongue of land commanding the entrance to the harbour might have been once crowned with an occasional entrenchment .. but of which not a trace now appears by which to calculate the form, the consequence or the age of such fortification.”This site could not be located.

Tower Hill Burial Ground RCAM

A site on Tower Hill. A single block of stone is visible on the surface. It may be suggested that here stood Capel y Drindod, one of the four subordinate Chapels to Fishguard Church Visited 3rd June 1915.

Hen Fynwent RCAM

A field known as “old Church Field” opposite Parc y Morfa in Lower Fishguard. It has Long been under cultivation. Lower Fishguard was known as the hamlet of Capel Llanfihangel – ffisguard cum capel Michangel (Owen Pem 288) This may be the site of the Chapel thus alluded to by George Owen – Visited 10th June 1915

Llan Fartin RCAM

This is the site of the Chapel of St Martin at Llanfartin, it is close to the border of Fishguard North and Manorowen. Afield adjoining Llanfartin Cottage is yet known as “Yr Hen Fynwent” Within the living memory of Mr Brown of Trellewelyn a tombstone found therein was removed to Manorowen churchyard, and another (it is said) to Jordanston. Until lately a fragment of old walling remained, which was locally said to be a portion of the Chapel. It is also reported that “a window which belonged to this Chapel is still to be seen” Visited 17th June 1915.

Glyn y Mel (Glynamel) RCAM

This is the name of the small glen through which the river Gwaun winds its brief final course before loosing itself in Fishguard Bay.

A Stone Ring RCAM

Probably a spindle whorl - “found in a tumulus near Fishguard” was exhibited in 1851 by Mr John Fenton Arch Camb 1851 p334 . Its present location is unknown.

Parc yr Och Tumulus RCAM

This sepulchral mound stands in a field known as Parx yr Och, the field of Lamentation, about 200yds west of the footpath which divided the parish from that of Llanstinan. About the year 1800 it was opened by Fenton and an urn was found. The tumulus today has a height of from 2 to 3ft above the level, and a circumference of 180ft; it is grass grown – Visited 6th September 1920

Tumulus RCAM

On a stony “Rhos” or open land near Criney Bridge, which is being cleared for cultivation, was recently (August 1920)) revealed what must have been an extremely interesting burial ground. The mound had a height of some 2 ft and a circumference of about 180 ft, and was outlined by small well set boulders. These were removed and used for road mending. A trench was then observed on the east side running in the direction of the centre of the mound; the trench was about 2ft wide and 4ft deep was lined and paved with flat stones and it led to a cist. The cist was about 3ft Long and had a base and covering of hard clay. Within the cist was an urn which, judging from the fragments remaining on the day of our Inspector’s visit was probably 15 in. in height and from 10 to 12 in diameter at the mouth. The neck was ornamented with four lines of herringbone pattern 3 in wide . The urn which rested upon a flat stone contained incinerated remains; these were unfortunately scattered by the breaking of the vessel; eighty one of the fragments were collected on the site by our officer, but several had already been carried away by visitors. The disturbed ground revealed a quantity of small White quartz stones with which, it was said the clay floor was strewn. Adjoining this mound in the same field are three of four other low mounds which present every appearance of being sepulchral. Visited 7th September 1920

The Lady Stone RCAM

This stone , so called from its fancied resemblance to a veiled female , stands by the roadside, at a spot known as Yet y bontbren, over two miles east by north of Fishguard, and in a field still locally called Parc y maen. The field of the stone. It is somewhat pointed, has a height from the level of 8ft 6in, and a circumference of 122 inc. it is said (Pem Arch Survey) “that passengers on the coach are in the habit of saluting it by taking off their hats.

Carn Blewyn; Carn Madog; Carn Slanney; Carn Slideran RCAM

These are natural outcrops of rock, and of no archaeological significance –Visited 25th June 1920

Castell Draenen RCAM

Faint traces of this small earthwork were visible on Parc Castell within recent years. Cultivation has completely obliterated them and an adjoining cottage known as Castell has been razed. The site is marked by a solitary tree in the middle of the field. The earthwork was in the form apparently more oval than round. On the eastern side is the copious spring of “Fgynnon Caran” corrupted into “Ffynnon Crane” – Visited 10th June 1915

Site of Chapel RCAM

The site of a Chapel is marked by the Ordnance sheet on the left side of a narrow lane leading out of the Fishguard -Newport main road and on a field known as Parc yr hengapel immediately SSE of the farm house of Capel. Nothing is now visible above the surface, but when ploughing the lower part of the field discloses a quantity of slatey blue stone and the fence especially where the lane makes an elbow (probably Marking the entrance to the Chapel enclosure) is largely built up of stones which have been set in mortar. Regarding the history or dedication nothing is known (Pem Arch Survey) Visited 24th June 1920

Llanust RCAM

A Chapel is said to have stood upon this farm of which no traces are visible (Pem Arch. Survey) The spelling on the 1in Ordnance map is Llaneist and on the modern maps is Llaneast.

Old Castle Close RCAM

Several fields around Ddolwen farm house were formerly known as Old Castle Close but the name had died out in the district, and is not remembered at the farm itself. About 500 yds immediately north, just over the border in the parish of Fishguard North are the remains of the earthwork – Visited 7th September 1920

Carreg Samson, Carn Wen, Chambered Tomb I; Garn Wen

Carreg Samson is the most southerly of three closely grouped burial chambers set in a north-south line . All three monuments appear to have had a capstone partly earthbound and partly supported. Carreg Samson is the largest of the capstones, being 4.0m by 3.2m and there is a trace of a probable mound against its north side. RCAHMW J.Wiles 01.05.02

Pen-Rhiw, Burial Chamber; Parc-Y-Cromlech, Chambered Tomb

Three redundant stone supporters define a chamber 3.9m by 1.8m, with a displaced capstone resting partly on the ground. Traces of a mound have been reported but not subsequently confirmed. RCAHMW

Park-y-Llan, Enclosures

Features in Park-y-Llan field: drystone walls define a subcircular enclosure, c.26m N-S by 34-26m, resting against the field wall on the S, having an entrance at its W junction; from this enclosure sinuous walls lead N, within the field, the western one running along the spine of an outcrop; a low bank crossing the field appears to continue the line of the fieldwall abutting its E side; N of this bank, the line of the eastern wall leading N from the enclosure appears to be continued by a similar bank, with the fieldwall immediately to the N continuing its line.

Features portrayed on OS County series (Pembroke IV.15 1889).

Caerau, Y, 'BRITISH Town'

Turf-covered remains of a rectangular, stone-built structure, about 25m NNW-SSE by 15m, much robbed internally, exposed stones show signs of burning; slate fragments occur in molehills around the site: the building rests on a pronounced east-facing lynchet, part of a relict, rectilinear field system that extends over an area of some 200m north-east to south-west by 100m, across generally north-facing slopes. Visited 21.02.04

Can be identified with the 'extensive foundations of old walls' noted in the mid 19th century (Pughe 1855, 271); records of an enclosure (RCAHM 1925, 94, No.239; CrossLey 1963, 200, No.27) may refer to a site to the west known as 'Hendinas', mentioned by Pughe, to which notice of Roman coins & sepulchral urns may also refer RCAHM 1925 J.Wiles 08.03.05

Fishguard Seaplane Base

A concrete slipway is the only remaining evidence of Royal Naval Air Service seaplane base which was established in 1917. The base covered 3 acres to the north of the railway station (Fishguard Harbour Station?). It comprised a canvas and wood hanger, sheds, the slipway and a wireless station.

Event and Historical Information:

The Royal Navy stationed three Fairey Hamble Babies and three Short 184 seaplanes at Fishguard during the First World War. The seaplanes formed the coastal patrol flights 426 and 427 of 245 Squadron. A small wooden framed hangar covered in canvas formed the maintenance area.

Accommodation was also in tents, although an Officers mess was established in the Fishguard Bay Hotel and in a nearby requisitioned cottage. RCAHMW, May 2008.

Fishguard's Market Hall

Fishguard's Market Hall was originally begun c.1830, when what is now solely the Town Hall was constructed as a combined Market and Town Hall. A tithe map of 1844 shows the Hall to the front, facing Market Square, with a long yard filled with covered lean-to stalls at the rear. In the late nineteenth century the Market was divided from the Town Hall and the current Market building was constructed from rubble masonry, with the roof supported on iron trusses.

Between 1839 and 1844 rural south Wales was plagued by what has become known as the ‘Rebecca Riots’, when groups dressed as women and calling themselves ‘Rebecca and Her Daughters’ attacked tollgates in protest against the expensive tolls which afflicted those bringing their stock to the Market. In 1843 approximately 2,000 rioters occupied Fishguard Square, and the town magistrates and constables were forced to flee. When order was returned and suspects arrested, they were imprisoned in the town’s Market Hall.

The building also houses the town’s Library and Tourist Information Centre, together with the Last Invasion Gallery, displaying the tapestry which was completed in 1997 to commemorate the 200 year anniversary of the thwarted French Invasion, designed to ape the famous Bayeux Tapestry.Source: Cadw Listed Buildings Record K Steele, RCAHMW, 12 January 2009

Fishguard Quay

The old harbour of Fishguard is known as Lower Fishguard or Cwm Harbour and had a herring fleet. The present structure of the Quay dates from the 19th century, but there were probably Moorings here since 16th century. Warehouses remain from its days as a major herring and trading port. RCAHMW, 2009.

Fishguard Harbour

Fishguard Harbour was created by blasting vast quantities of rock from the cliffs on the west side of Fishguard Bay, north of Goodwick village, to provide a level area of nearly 11 hectares. Upon this a huge Quay was constructed, wide enough to accommodate the newly-built railway line from Clarbeston road, the harbour station and its associated sidings and buildings, and long enough to accommodate transatlantic liners. Planned to be the western end of the Great western Railway's line from London and its major sea port, replacing Neyland, the harbour opened in 1906 with the inauguration of the Fishguard to Rosslare boat service. The anticipated transatlantic traffic did not materialise. A stone breakwater extends from Pen Cw at the north end of the Quay into Fishguard Bay; it was later lengthened to about 850m and a lighthouse constructed on the eastern end. A 750m-long inner or east breakwater, carrying a navigation light at its northern end, was added later. A housing estate, known as Harbour Village for railway employees was built on Pen Cw. B.A.Malaws, RCAHMW, 19 May 2008.

Royal Oak Public House, Market Square, Fishguard

18th century, probably. One storey and attic. Front elevation of 3 bays, with pebbledash cladding and stuccoed plinth. A peace treaty was signed here between the British and French invasion force in 1797. RCAHMW

Glyn-Y-Mel, Garden, Fishguard

Originally the home of Richard Fenton (1747-1821) the county historian, author of A Historical Tour through Pembrokeshire (London, 1811). The original site had a Picturesque garden enhanced by the steep cliff-side of Fishguard old town. It was enjoyed along contrived walks cut (1799-1805) into the slopes behind (N) of the house. There are terraces and a small garden surrounding the house and river meadow flanking the Afon Gwaun. The addition of 'Plas' is recent.

On the first 25 inch OS plans the site is shown to have several glasshouses set mainly in the probable kitchen garden. There is even more glass on the 2nd edition. Now part of the garden has become a swimming pool.

C.S.Briggs 29.10.05

This garden is depicted on the Second Edition Ordnance Survey 25-inch map of Pembrokeshire IX, sheet 4 (1907). C.H. Nicholas, RCAHMW, 24th August 2006.

Castle Point Old Fort; Fishguard Fort

Artillery fort: a roughly 30m east-west by 25m enclosure upon Castle Point, comprising a battery facing north & west, with a simple wall set across the neck of the promontory. Constructed 1781, the fort had eight 9-pounder Cannon and participated in the action of 1797. J. Wiles 30.09.2003 One of the few pre-Second World War coastal defences to have fired shots in anger, Fishguard Fort occupies Castle Point overlooking Fishguard Harbour from the south-east. It was built between 1781 and 1785 and successfully warded off the French invasion force of 1797 with a single Cannon Ball, forcing them to land further along the coast of Pen-caer/Strumble Head. Today the fort stands restored with four Cannon facing bravely out to sea (RCAHMW, AP_2005_1342). Goodwick

1895 Nooks And Corners Of Pembrokeshire Timmins

The lane now winds downhill, and we soon find ourselves pacing the smooth firm expanse of Goodwic Sands, with the hamlet of that ilk clinging to a wooded hillside before us. Goodwic is picturesquely situated, overlooking a tiny Haven and pier in an elbow of the rock close under the Hill. Its genial climate and safe bathing shore make the place deservedly- popular, and cause the handful of lodging-houses to fill up rapidly - during ' the season."

A large village at Fishguard Bay, with Streets and houses clinging to the steep eastern slopes of Pen Caer.

Once a sleepy fishing village, the settlement expanded rapidly around the turn of the century with the development of the rail terminal and the harbour designed for trans-Atlantic liner traffic. The high hopes of the developers were unfulfilled, but the port became (and remains) an important one for Irish Ferry traffic. Sealink vessels transport containers and other traffic, and passengers between Fishguard and Rosslare daily.

Goodwich has a pleasant sandy beach and its sheltered waters make it a popular boating centre. The Last Invasion of Britain occurred hereabouts in 1797, and the defeated French soldiers laid down their arms on Goodwick Sands. High on the headland above the harbour is Harbour Village, built around 1906 by the GWR as a railway workers settlement. The most imposing building in Goodwick is the Fishguard Bay Hotel, now thriving after a chequered history. Behind the Frenchman Motel is the site of the old Goodwick Brickworks, which closed in 1969.

1905 Two and a half million tons of rock blasted out of the Quarry in one explosion -wanted for harbour site.

Goodwick

A narrow strip of land in modern Pembrokeshire, to the west side of Fishguard Harbour, Goodwick Brook and Goodwick Moor. The area is now largely built over by the town of Goodwick, whose development is almost entirely a product of the 19th century and 20th century. There is little recorded earlier settlement; it lay outside the medieval and later borough of Fishguard. The northern end of the area, now occupied by the Goodwick Ferry Terminal and associated development, lies largely upon made ground laid down in 1906 to connect the terminal with a large breakwater. Historically the headland on which the breakwater was constructed, Pen-cw Point, more-or-less formed an island. However, a ?neolithic hammer-stone found on the slope above Pen-cw Point, a possible flintworking floor, a possible round barrow and an important early medieval penannular brooch retrieved from Goodwick Sands all indicate an earlier human presence, if not settlement. The area, moreover, had been named 'Pwllgwdig' as early as 1074 when it was the scene of a battle between warring Welsh Princes, the site of which has been tentatively identified as Goodwick Moor. During the later medieval period, the area formed part of the medieval Cantref Pebidiog, or 'Dewisland', which was held directly by the Bishops of St David's, having represented the core of the bishopric from 1082 when it was granted (or confirmed) by Rhys ap Tewdwr, King of pre-Anglo-Norman Conquest Dyfed, to Bishop Sulien. Pwll-hir Common, over which part of the town is built, may have medieval origins but has no recorded early history. The raised saltmarshes of Goodwick Moor, a small part of which lie within this area, exhibit a number of physical features associated with land-reclamation, including the ?early post-medieval canalisation of Goodwick Brook and several earthworks. The Bishops of St David's who owned saltmarsh meadows here until the 20th century may have undertaken some drainage works.

The small nucleated hamlet at Dyffryn, which lay on an island of enclosed land in saltmarsh, appears to have developed from a gentry-house, Dyffryn Goodwick. The house, which may be mentioned in a deed of 1595, was certainly present in 1624 and the site still remains.

To the north a gentry-house – Goodwick House - had been constructed on part of Pwll-hir Common overlooking the harbour, prior to 1702. A Quay had also been constructed on the site of the harbour breakwater (shown on a map of 1815). The tithe map of 1845 shows three distinct elements of what was to become Goodwick – the Quay with a small settlement, a small nucleation of houses at the crossroads on the foreshore, and Dyffryn hamlet.

In fact the development of the area did not really begin until 1906 when the ferry terminal, and railway link from Haverfordwest, were opened by the Great western Railway, the Fishguard and Rosslare Railway, and the City of Cork Steam Packet. The railway, breakwater and new port facilities are all depicted on the OS map of 1908 and many of the present structures retain substantial elements from these original buildings, particularly the railway station, the engine sheds and old customs house.

Goodwich House was purchased by the GWR and rebuilt as the Fishguard Bay Hotel. The map shows that Dyffryn was by now linked to the main settlement at Goodwick by the railway, and new houses had to be constructed along the valley floor and up the steep valley side. The constraints of the site were already apparent, as terraces of new houses had been built on the flat ground high above the harbour. Development during the 20th century was sporadic. Housing development continued along the valley floor, linking Dyffryn with Goodwick proper, and up the steep valley side. In the last quarter of the 20th century commercial development has taken place on the marsh behind the foreshore, and considerable improvements to the port's infrastructure have been carried out.

Description and essential historic landscape components

Goodwick is a small urban historic landscape character area located on a constrained site of steep southeast-facing valley side and a narrow valley bottom. Although it is a nucleated settlement, open spaces and woodland on the steep valley sides between the houses lend a rural aspect to parts of Goodwick. To its east lie the sea and a stretch of coastal marsh. Goodwick harbour and the railway are the core and raison d'être of the settlement. There are very few historic landscape components earlier than the 19th century, and most date to the mid-to-late 19th century and 20th century. The oldest portion of the area is at Dyffryn. Here there are some older stone-built structures, including Dyffryn House, a substantial stone-built house with 16th century elements, and a former watermill. From the commercial/industrial core at the harbour residential settlement spreads along the valley floor and up the valley side. The central, oldest, residential part of Goodwick is nucleated around a road intersection at the base of the valley side. Here shops, houses, public houses and Chapels are mostly of mid-to-late 19th century date. There is considerable variety in building materials and styles. Materials range from red brick through to bare stone and cement rendered stone. Corrugated-iron sheeting protects the walls on some buildings. Included is a corrugated-iron Hall – the former Goodwick Institute built in c. 1900. Stone buildings are generally earlier and include early 19th century cottages.

The gothic style Church of St Peter dates to 1910. Slate is the most common roofing material. Linear development of later 19th century terraced housing built as single units is situated on the valley floor, while on the constrained valley side more informal terraces, larger detached or semi detached housing has developed, again in a variety of styles and materials, but with many buildings displaying neo-gothic porches, windows and other details. During the 20th century small linear housing estates were built on the less steep higher slopes on the minor road up to Stop-and-Call and on the plateau above Goodwick Harbour, as well as along the main A487 road (now quiet since it was bypassed by the Fishguard Eastern Bypass) to the southeast of the old residential core. The railway station on the Quayside retains many of its early 20th century redbrick buildings. The former brick stationmaster's house is on Station Hill.

Nearby the Fishguard Bay Hotel dates to the late 19th century but was enlarged in 1905 by the Great western Railway in the anticipation of trans-Atlantic passengers. The gardens of the hotel, laid out in the first decade of the 20th century are included in the Register of Parks and Gardens for Carmarthenshire, Ceredigion and Pembrokeshire. Several listed structures in Goodwick include public buildings and older cottages, but not the more typical late 19th century terraced and other houses. Much of the harbour and port facilities are of late 20th century date and include extensive infrastructure for the Irish car ferries. The main, north, breakwater, dating to the early 20th century is a prominent feature of this area; the less massive east breakwater less so. Petrol stations, light industry and leisure facilities developed in the late 20th century across reclaimed marsh and alongside the A40(T) road that runs along the sea front. Within this area are small pockets of steep coastal slope.

Recorded archaeology mostly consists of 19th century and 20th century structures associated with the port and town, but a possible bronze age round barrow and a prehistoric flint working site lie in the area.

This is a very distinctive historic landscape character area and contrasts with neighbouring areas of farmland and marsh. It is separated from the older urban area of Fishguard by a stretch of marsh and foreshore.

Fishguard Harbour: North Breakwater Lighthouse

Fishguard Harbour was opened in 1906. The new development included a stone breakwater, extending from Pen Cw at the north end of the Quay into Fishguard Bay. This breakwater was later lengthened to about 850m and a lighthouse constructed on the eastern end. A Notice to Mariners printed in the County Echo, 12 April 1906, notes that the harbour was intended to open around 1 August and that the light on the end of the breakwater would be 'a red flashing light giving one flash every five seconds... the focal plane will be 46 feet above High Water Spring Tides and the light will be of about 5,700 candle power and visible all round, will have a range in clear weather of about 12 miles'. The fog signal was to be a Bell sounded every 10 seconds. In addition, a gas-lighted conical Bell buoy was installed some 350ft from end of the breakwater. Painted black and White with one occultation above every 10 seconds, vessels were to pass to eastward. RCAHMW, February 2013.

The fishtraps of Fishguard Harbour, Goodwick.

Fishguard has a Scandanavian name fiskigardr ('enclosure for catching or keeping fish'). The commercial port of Fishguard Harbour at Goodwick was largely constructed towards the end of the nineteenth century and the start of the twentieth.

Two stone-built fish traps flank the north and south sides of Fishguard Harbour, Pembrokeshire.

The fish trap to the north-west of Fishguard Harbour lies just below the entrance road to the ferry terminal. It is first shown on the early maritime charts of Lewis Morris dating from 1748, and is depicted on the first edition Ordnance Survey 25in map of 1889 as an inverted 'V'-shaped submerged stone wall, adjoining coastal rocks north of the village of Goodwick at its west end. It extends for approximately 100 metres to the east into Fishguard Harbour and turns to the south for approximately 120m. The east-west section was destroyed by construction of the railway between 1901 and 1906. The hooked portion of the trap is locally renowned as a good place to catch Bass which gather there to feed on the crab population.

Aerial photographs taken through clear shallow water on 1st June 2009 showed remains of other submerged walls and structures to the south-west of this trap of unknown date and character. This trap is related to a smaller V-shaped fish trap on the south-east side of the harbour, which has never been recorded on maps or charts

The south-east fishtrap, filmed for BBC Wales' Hidden Histories in 2009, is a 'V'-shaped stone-built fishtrap, springing from coastal rocks on its south side. It measures approximately 34m from base to apex, with equally-spaced arms measuring 40m long and up to 9m broad. It is built from large boulders, now partly dispersed with a few smaller stones visible in the matrix. The trap is only exposed at the lowest tides, of 0.5m and under. It is likely that a build-up of sand behind (to the west, beach-side of) the trap may have obscured further parts making it considerably larger. Because of the present sea-level it would be difficult to regularly use and make repairs to this fish trap, and this might indicate a construction date back in the Middle Ages, or earlier. This trap is not mapped on any sea-charts or historic maps, unlike its counterpart on the north-west side of Fishguard Harbour. The site was discovered and photographed through shallow water during Royal Commission aerial reconnaissance. RCAHMW, T. Driver, RCAHMW, 28th October 2009

Fishguard Harbour Submerged walls

To the south-west of the Fishguard Harbour fishtrap (NPRN 407699) are fragmentary remnants of two further V-shaped fish traps or angled walls, the largest measuring 100m north-south, together with other shorter walls lines and areas of stone. These may well be remnants of a shipbuilding yard hereabouts. Recorded during RCAHMW aerial reconnaissance on 1st June 2009.

William Marechal, Earl of Pembroke, who died in 1219, left to the monks of Pembroke, among other tithes, that of King's Mill at Castlemartin. The remains of the Castell of Castlemartin can still be seen in a field north of the Pound. It would seem to have been an earth fort of moderate size. Of the five roads meeting at the pound the one leading in the direction of Linney Head by is still called Bull Street; then, as now, it led from the Castell to Bluck's Pwll, under Linney Head. Castle Lady and Walman's Hill, close by, were both formerly earth-forts.

In 1244 we find mention of Sir John de Castro Martini, and again about 1270. John de Castro signed the charter of Philip de Angulo as a witness in 1298, and others of the name are spoken of in 1324 and in 1405. The Earls of Pembroke held the 'Castell' in their own hands, with its associated earth- forts at Bulliber and Flimston, together with King's Mill and the earth- fort adjacent to it, having a Knight Resident in charge of them. At the death of Earl Aymer de Valence in 1324 the Manor of Castlemartin was worth £102. Castlemartin was an exceedingly rich and valuable corn- growing district. Members of the family of de Castro Martini took part in the Irish Invasion under Henry II and Strongbow, and some remained and settled there, founding families; in later times the daughter of an Irishman, Sir Nicholas de Castlemartin, married Sir Richard Wellesley, an ancestor of the Dukes of Wellington.

According to an account in 1834 - the Church of Castlemartin underwent a thorough rebuilding in 1824-5.

Flimston was also a knightly residence under the Earls of Pembroke; William le Fleming, from whom it probably derived its name, held it in 1246, Walter de Castro in 1324. The Chapel at Flimston was described as being devoted to farm purposes in 1800. Archaeological Cambrensis on 1880 described it: Two floors for storing corn have been inserted. In the cart shed beneath the piscina and sedilia are still to be seen in the south wall. The roof is sharply vaulted like many churches in the neighbourhood. A small turret remains on the western gable. The stair to the first floor now occupies what may have been a sacristy

Freshwater East,

A large bay located about 2 miles south of Lamphey. There is a fine sandy beach backed by sand dunes, that used to be used by Pembroke Dockyard workers as a holiday place during the school holidays. Older workers used to tell stories of them going out at weekends to visit their wives and children who spent the whole holiday camping there mostly using ex-army WWI Bell tents furnished with tables, chairs beds and even sofa's, hurricane lamps and paraffin stoves for light and cooking. Today there is a holiday home development and a Caravan park. The County Council wishes to concentrate various types of holiday accommodation here. Reasonable access to the beach, but a shortage of summer parking.

Originally part of the Bishop of St David's manor of Llamphey.

Close to the road is a restored seaweed collector hut - once used for drying the special seaweed destined to become laver Bread.

The dunes cover both Mesolithic and Bronze Age sites. Traces of submerged forest 6000 years old occasionally are exposed.

Devils Quoit Dolmen is about 100 yards over a low fence opposite the drive entrance to Broomhill farm on the Angle road. About 3 feet above the ground, it has an enormous capstone supported on one side by two uprights. On the other side the third upright has collapsed.

Freystrop.

A Topographical Dictionary of Wales 1839 Lewis

Freystrop, a parish, in the union of Haverfordwest, hundred of Rhôs, county of Pembroke, South Wales, 2½ miles (S. by E.) from Haverfordwest, on the road by Pembroke Ferry to Pembroke; comprising the divisions of Higher and Lower Freystrop, and containing 671 inhabitants. In this parish is situated Clareston, an elegant modernised mansion, originally the residence of the family of Powel, and which is pleasantly situated in grounds well laid out. The area of the parish is 1592 acres; the lands are almost entirely in a state of cultivation, and the soil is tolerably fertile.

is found in abundance, and much of it is shipped for the supply of the neighbouring districts, at Hook Quay, on the river Cleddy. The living is a discharged rectory, rated in the King's Books at £5. 13. 9., endowed with £200 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Lord Chancellor: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £121. 10.; and there is a glebe of eighteen acres, valued, with appendages, at £41. 18. per annum. The Church is not distinguished by any remarkable feature. Here is a place of worship for Independents, with a Sunday school held in it; and a day school in connexion with the Established Church is supported by subscription. A spring here, the water of which crosses the turnpike-road, is strongly impregnated with iron, and is called by the villagers the Red Water, from the colour of its deposit.

Granston

Topographical Dictionary of Wales 1839 Lewis Granston

Granston, a parish, in the union of Haverfordwest, hundred of Dewisland, county of Pembroke, South Wales, 6 miles (W. S. W.) from Fishguard; containing 164 inhabitants. This parish is situated in the north-western part of the county, and within a short distance of the coast of St. George's Channel. It is intersected by the turnpike-road leading from Fishguard to St Davids, and is watered by a small stream, which, after flowing through it, falls into the sea near Aberbâch. The scenery is not distinguished by any peculiarity of feature, though from the higher grounds some good views are obtained over the Channel and the adjacent country. Tregwynt, the ancient mansion of the family of Harries, a branch of that seated at Priskilly, is within the parish. The living is a discharged vicarage, rated in the King's Books at £6. 8. 11½., and having the vicarages of Mathrey and St. Nicholas' annexed, in the patronage of the Bishop of St Davids; net income, £316, with a glebe-house. A portion of the tithes of Granston belongs to a lay impropriator, whose claim has been commuted for a rent-charge of £17, and the portion connected with the vicarage for one of £50, to which is attached a glebe of fourteen acres, valued at £7 per annum. The Church, dedicated to St. Catherine, is a plain edifice, containing some good mural tablets, erected to members of the Priskilly family, of whom several were interred here. There is a large place of worship for Baptists, with a Sunday school held in it.

Granston Church Church in Wales site(North Dewisland Benefice, St David's Diocese)

Granston Church stands on a mound veiled by trees, overlooking Granston farm. The present building dates from 1877, replacing an early medieval Church. The original foundations of the Church seem to have been retained; a plain edifice of a nave and chancel with a squint arch - lit from the outside by a small circular window - leading through what is now the north transept. The Victorian structure has retained much of the unadorned simplicity that appears to have characterised the earlier, medieval building. On the theme of the loaves and fishes the altar, lectern and pulpit hangings have modern embroideries.

The Taxatio of 1291 and the Black Book of St Davids - an inventory of the diocesan assets prepared for Bishop Martyn in 1326 - record that the benefice of Granston had connections with the Tironian Monastery at St Dogmael's near Cardigan. When the parish was united with that of St Nicholas, the patronage of St Nicholas remained with the Bishop of St Davids, while that of Granston was attached to the crown after the Dissolution.

Granston was the site of an episcopal court which collected rents and was responsible for ensuring that the tenants of the Bishop performed their feudal duties at the appropriate season. To the north west of the churchyard, a small stone enclosure containing a quantity of fallen stone rubble may, according to local tradition, be part of an early court building. The Welsh name for the manor - Treopert - points to the tenure of one Robert at an early stage in its history. Tradition associates Granston with Robert, one of the sons of William the Conqueror, but given the connection with St Dogmael's Abbey, it is possible that the Robert in question may be Robert FitzMartin of Cemais.

RCAM St Catherine's Church

St Catherine Church is a modern building erected in 1877, which has retained no features of antiquity from its predecessor "a plain edifice, not claiming notice for any peculiarity of architecture (Lewis Top Dic Wales) -except a font 24in external and 20 in internal diameter; total height 29in) the octagonal basin of which slopes off to a circular shaft and base. It may date from the latter half of the 14th century –Visited 1st May 1920

The existence of the Church is confirmed back to the mid 18th century by a grave tablet dating to 1745 inside the Church. Records of marriages, births and deaths survive for the parish of Dewis-Land from 1788. The living was annexed to Mathry in the archdeaconary and diocese of St David's. In 1833, S. Lewis in his Topographical Dictionary of Wales noted that the Church was 'a plain edifice, not claiming notice for any peculiarity of architecture...' but 'with several good mural tablets' erected to the memory of the Priskilly family. A plaque inside the Church commemorating Rev Rowland Daniel who died in 1879, notes that it was through his zeal that the Church was rebuilt. A report of the reopening of Granston Church was printed in the Pembrokeshire Herald and General Advertiser in July 1878

The living of Granston, which is now united to St. Nicholas, would appear to have been a separate benefice in 1287, but the union between the two churches must have taken place prior to 1535, and probably under some arrangement between the Abbot of St. Dogmaels and the Bishop of St Davids, as the Valor Eccl. states that the abbot was rector of the united churches, while the then vicar had been collated by the Canons Resident of St Davids Cathedral. According to Owen's Pem. the patronage of the united churches was in 1594 vested in the Bishop, and Granston (no doubt meaning the rectory) belonged to the Queen as being appendant to the Monastery of St. Dogwells, while the Church of St. Nicholas was appendant to the Prebend of St. Nicholas. In 1291 Granston Church, under the name of Ecclesia de Villa Grandi, was assessed for tenths to the King at £5 6s. 8d., the amount payable being 10s. 8d..

Granston (S. Catherine).

The Chalice here is of good Elizabethan type. Within the one band round the centre of the bowl is inscribed "POCVLVM * ECLESIE * DE • CRANSTON « ANNO • DOMINI » 1639". The leopard's head crowned and lion passant are legible but the date letter and maker's Mark are unfortunately obliterated. The knob on the stem is ornamented with intermittent lines whilst beneath the bowl is a belt of vertical line moulding. This pretty little cup has been badly used and badly mended. Height, 5 in. ; diam. of bowl, 3 in. ; depth, 3 in. ; diam. of foot which has been filled in with a circular plate for additional support. 3 in.; weight, 6 oz. 10 dwts.

— A plain Paten, 8 in. in diameter and weighing 6oz. 5 dwts., bears the Exeter hall Mark of 1858 and the maker's Mark J. W & Co. in a four-lobed shield.

— There is also a small one-handled pewter cup bearing 00 marks and of little interest. A similar cup is found at Maenclochog.

Nonconformist Chapels:

Llangloffan Welsh Baptist Chapel, Llangloffan, Granston

1851 Llangloffan Baptist "There are two services every Sunday Evening which are kept in two domestic houses and in the Chapel and a Domestic House alternately. The service in the afternoon is kept once a month in a Domestic House" - Thomas Williams, Minister.

The cause at Llangloffan was a daughter of that at Rhydwylym, and started between 1668-1680 with meetings at Trebwllyt, the home of Owen Edwards. Slightly later the meetings moved to the home of William Garnon in Castle Morris, but they soon outgrew his house and had to be held in the open air at a spot known as 'Y Cornel Bach'. Llangloffan Baptist Chapel was built in 1706, only the third Baptist Chapel to be built in Wales, and was incorporated from Rhydwylym in 1745. It was restored in 1749, again in 1791 and rebuilt in 1862, opening in August 1863. The clerk of works was Thomas Mathias of Llangloffan Uchaf, the designer recorded as William Davies of Trefelin, but it is likely that Joshua Morris of Newport was also involved.

The present Chapel, dated 1862, is built in the Sub-Classical style with a gable entry plan. The large gable façade has a central door with a tracery fanlight incorporating the Morris motif of the 'dove ascending'. Above this is a triplet of tall, narrow round-headed windows with Y tracery, with two larger full height round-headed windows flanking the doorway which incorporate both Y headed glazing and the dove motif. Pilasters to the outer bays support a shallow pediment arch. There is the inscription LLANGLOFFAN Baptist Chapel together with the dates 1706, 1749, 1791 and 1862.

Internally the platform pulpit has been altered and moved forward, probably when the Organ was inserted behind it in 1962. The three sided gallery is relatively plain with long panels to the front, and supported in timber columns decorated with marbled paintwork. There is a particularly fine large, central ceiling rose incorporating concentric circles of geometric patterns, floral designs, foliate patterns and a inner hanging pendant of curled leaves.

External baptistry.

The Chapel is currently still in use with a small congregation and services at least once a month.

Sites of Interest.

Llangloffan Cross

About a mile south of the parish Church is the little hamlet of Llangloffan and 500yds north of the village , on the line of the St Davids-Fishguard main road, where a cross road forms a broad space is Llangloffan Cross. It is probably the site of a medieval cross. The second field south west of the crossroads is called Parc y garreg and the field directly north is known as Parc y groes. There is also a Maen gloffan, a prehistoric boulder which may have borne a rude cross.

Parc y cerrig

These are two adjoining fields doubtless forming one situated close to the village of Granston. The name may have been derived from a vanished Cairn – Visited 1st May 1920

Gumfreston

In the early Welsh period the parish of Gumfreston may have formed part of a Welsh Chieftain patrimony, whose power was centred at Narberth. On the foundation of strong Norse settlements in Castlemartin and Roose the district probably followed the fortunes. of Tenby, from which it is distant a little more than a mile, and became the patrimony of a Scandinavian viking named Gumfrid the Taxatio of 1291 gives the name of the parish as Villa Gunfrid. To a deed of the year 1375 on John Wydeloek the elder, " of Gumfreyhiston," is a party The Patent Roll of Ric. II enrols the presentation of Maurice Vachan, Parson of Gumfreiston in the diocese of St David to the Church of Nerbar. In 1533 the Valor Ecclesiasticus has the spelling Gomffreston. The Lay Subside of the year 1543 (P.R.O., 223/417) for the hundreds of Narberth and Castlemartin gives Gumfroyston; while in a list of Pembrokeshire churches of the year 1594, printed in Owen's Pembrokeshire it appears as Gumfreiston. The Welsh list of parishes in Peniarth MS. 147 (Evans, Cat. 917, Hist. MSS. Commission) has the form Gwrnffreystown—a spelling which makes it clear that the parish possessed no Welsh name. Gumfreston, though included by George Owen in his list of manors of the county (Owen's Pem., i, 898), is not referred to as a manor in any medieval document. New Inn Hall Oxford, possessed three acres of land, " adjoining to the parsonage there set, lying and being in the parish of Comeffreystone (sait of Robert Lowgher, doctor of civil .law, and principal of the Hall against Lewis son of Sir James Williams (P.R.O.; Chancery Proceeding Series II 117/46)

There is a legend that St Teilo was born here.

Certainly acc/to the Llandaff records the lands of this area belonged to St Teilo.

Amongst the various documents contained in the collection known as The book of Llan Dav which were brought together in connection with the claim of Landaff to episcopal jurisdiction over all churches of Teilo's foundation, wherever situated are several lists of the churches thus claimed, the lists being unquestionably of earlier date than the collection within which they are preserved. The churches which fall into what may be termed the Teilo area of the later county of Pembroke are thus enumerated—

Lann rath.

Lann cronnguern cum tribus territoriis Amrath. Finis illarum o frut gurcant hit glan rath.
Tref carn villa tantum sine ecclesia.

Laithiti Teliau super ripam Ritec, villam tantum juxta Penn Alunn- Menechi ar glann Ritec juxta Pen Alun.

Pull arda junta mainaur Pir, villa tantum

Luin Teliau, villa tantum

Eccluis guiniau ubi natus est sanetus Teliau

Porth medgen, villa tantum.

Porth manach mainaur inamithiel.

Din guennhaf in Lonion villa tantum.

The first name, Llan rath, when taken with the particulars given in the next entry Amrath and hit elan rath. maybe safely regdrd as representing the modern Amroth, much as by a diametrically opposite linguistic turn the Lonion of the document has become the modern Lanion near Pembroke. The rath at Amroth is doubtless the mound, of which only faint traces exist, placed near the Church and on ground called in the Tithe Schedule " Castle park " (see No. 13)-

The tribes terntsriis Amrath are more particularly set forth in the original charters which is also contained in the Book of Llan Dav (p. 125)- Here Aircol lauhir fil to Tryfun rege Demetice regionis grants to St. Teilo the three villis Trefearn. Finis o uinyd garthon di blain nant Brat yr guairet hit in Ritec.

Ex alia parte o uinyd garthon hit nant y clavorion bet (hit) in Ritec; Laith ty Teliau, o earn baclan di ail meiniauc bet (hit) in Ritec; Menechi, o tref eithinauc di nant hirotguidou bet in Ritec. Ex alia parte o tonou (?) pencenn (pencefn) di blain nant castellt cerran bet (hit) in Ritee-

It will be noticed that the three villis are described in the charter as each extending hit in Ritec, that is as far as (or to) the Ritec; and in the list of churches

Laith ty Teilo is said to be super ripam Ritec junta Pen Alun, whilst

Menechi is given as ar glan Ritec junta Pen Alun.

The Ritec is the stream that falls into the sea at Tenby after a straight easterly course of about six miles from its source in the Long ridge of open down extending from directly above Tenby- to within half a mile of Pembroke. along the summit of this open land runs a track known as the Ridgeway, the trackway being bordered by many monuments of antiquity. The course of the little stream is on the north side of the upland, but by a sharp bend round the corner of the ridge it reaches the sea a little to the south of the Ridgeway. Traced from its mouth, it is first found to form a boundary between the parishes of Tenby (St. Mary in Liberty) and Penally, next between Gumfreston and Penally, then between Penally and St. Florence, finally disappearing within the last-named parish at a point nearly a mile beyond its parish Church.

The first-named of the villis in the district round about (Am)Rath, Tref Carn, would appear to have been situated in the north-eastern corner of the parish of St. Florence, where on the boundary line between St. Florence and Gumfreston parishes is an outcrop of rock called Carn Rock, and adjacent to it the Tithe Schedule of St. Florence locates two Carn Meadows. The trev or township probably extended from the borders of the parish to the Ritec, a distance of a little over a mile.

The name of the second vill is Llaethdy Teilo. Taken literally, this means Teilo's dairy, but seeing that Teilo, like his rival David, was probably the son of a Welsh chieftain, or, at lowest, of a Welsh free tribesman, and would accordingly -be reared by foster-parents, the words may signify the trev of Teilo's fosterage. It is described as being upon the banks of Ritec, where, a few yards directly north of Carswell Farm, is a spot called in the Tithe Schedule of Gumfreston " The Palace," which term is possibly intended to represent the Welsh Llys, and to denote a habitation of dignity and repute. Furthermore, a short mile to the south of the site just indicated, and on the slopes of the Ridgeway, the Tithe Schedule gives the name " Castle Gwyne " to the field immediately behind the faint remains of the ancient manor house of Trefloyne. Now, the old list of Teilo foundations mentions one of them as Eccluis guiniau, " where St. Teilo was born." There is now no trace of either eglwys " or " Castle," but there can be little doubt that we are here in the immediate neighbourhood of Teilo's birthplace and upbringing, and possibly upon the scene of his earliest labours.

Menechi (Monks' town), the third vill, extended from Tref eithinog (gorse vill) to the streamlet of Nant y rhodwydieu, thence to the Ritec; in other directions is from Tonou Pencenn (Read Pen ceun, the top of the ridge), to (or towards) Nant Castell Cerran, thence to the Ritec.

Thus the three trevs had a common boundary in the brook Ritec, and were probably three patrimonies lying on the south or perhaps both sides of the stream, and, taking Amroth as having been in the Welsh Church period a district of considerable importance and area, it would appear that the first-named of the trevs was situated to the north of the Ritec stream with its dependence upon the little seaport of Amroth; Llaethdy Teilo formed the southern part, with Penally as its natural point of concentration; and (Tref y) Myneich (Monks tun) came between them.

Parish Church Dedication to St. Lawrence.

1849 Gumfreston Church Arch Camb

This is one of those picturesque and simple, yet architecturally curious churches with which the county of Pembroke abounds. Situated in a quiet nook, retiring from the north side of that long valley which is bounded on the south by the Hill of the Ridgeway, and on the Opposite by the high land stretching from Tenby towards Carew the Church of Gumfreston lies imbedded amidst trees, and almost hidden from the prying observation of man. The parish is small, with few inhabitants; the district, though in the immediate neighbourhood of the most delightful of Cambrian watering – places, is but little rambled over; here rustic simplicity still dwells; here pastoral piety still presides over the welfare of the rural flock; hospitality, happiness, and humility, are here combined in rare unison with comfort and content; it is an oasis in this dusty world, and the waters of life flow forth here for the benefit of him who dwells in, as well as of him who visits, this retired yet cheerful spot. In the lower portion of the churchyard, at the south-eastern end, are three limpid wells, held in recesses not altogether unaided by the hand of man, and totally distinct from, though within a foot or two, of each other. From the lowermost trickles out a sulphurous stream; the middle one is a good chalybeate; the upper well is some of the purest drinking water in the neighbourhood; – a poetical symbol of the healing Properties of the place.

The Church consists of a nave and chancel, with a tower standing at the junction of the two on the northern side, and a small mortuary Chapel opposite to it on the south. Of the style of the architecture it is difficult to speak with precision, at least in terms suited to modern architectural science, inasmuch as this, like most other edifices in Pembrokeshire, is of a class sui generis, and requires almost a separate phraseology for itself. However, the chancel and Chapel may be designated as Early Decorated, and the rest of the edifice as partly of Late, partly of Full, Perpendicular character. At the west end of the nave is the only entrance into the Church under a porch of Early Perpendicular curves in its archway; and at the right hand corner occurs the stoup for Holy Water, an ancient octagonal Font, let into the main wall of the Church, and partly projecting into the porch. A stone bench runs along each wall.

The nave is lighted by three square-headed windows of very late and almost modern character, but with chamfered monials of two and three lights, all in the southern wall, there being no aperture for light whatever in the northern. On the latter side, however, is to be remarked a semicircular recess, possibly of remote date, once lighted by a loop from without, with a domical vault nine feet wide by four feet deep. Within this is placed the Font, and it thus constitutes a small and simple Baptistry. The Font itself is of the thirteenth century, being a massive square basin with chamfered edges on a circular shaft, similar in character to many others in this district, though wholly without decoration. It is about three feet high, and two feet in diameter, and is of good character and workmanship.

The nave is separated from the chancel by an Early Pointed arch, so nearly approaching to the circular in its curvature as to indicate perhaps the earliest remaining portion of the edifice, or one coeval with the Font. It is only five feet high to the impost, a square, chamfered abacus, and seven feet six inches to the vertex of the arch.

The chancel has had its eastern window altered, so as to lose all architectural character, but it is remarkable for a decorated piscina of beautiful proportions, with a four lobed basin, on the southern side. Within this piscina, and over the drain, still stands, and has stood from time immemorial, the Sancte Bell, intended for the hand, eight inches high, of good bronze metal, though now cracked, and of plain workmanship, without any ornament or design on it whatever - a rare instance of the simplicity and honesty of the parish.

The mortuary Chapel opens from the southern side of the nave, at right Angles to it, and contains a pointed window of two trifoliated lights, of excellent proportion and design, the cusps being, as is usual in Early Decorated work, of peculiar boldness and harmony of curvature. No inscription, or trace of tomb, now remains within.

From the northern side of the nave, immediately to the westward of the chancel aisle opens the tower. This is built quite separate from the wall of the nave, and is no doubt a later addition to the Church; but it has been connected with the main building by a pointed arch cut through the wall, and a supplementary roof has been thrown from that of the nave to the wall of the tower. The ground floor of this tower has its vault in stone with a single ridge running north and south, and of a curvature very common in the castles and churches of this county. In the eastern wall remains, under a recess, an ancient altar; and in the west wall, opposite to it, is a lower and larger recess, nearly level with the ground, intended, perhaps, for a tomb, or an Easter Sepulchre. The north-eastern corner of this Chapel, for it served the purpose of such, is cut off by the wall of the staircase to the tower, which is here entered, for its upper stories, by a low square-headed doorway. In the south-eastern corner is a skew passage leading into the chancel. Across the nave, over the chancel arch, stretched the Rood Loft, the stone supports for which still remain, and show some curious principles of adaptation on the part of the original architect. A stone pillar, which aided in supporting the loft has been removed into the churchyard, and now stands on the northern side of the building.

The tower consists of five stories, including the lower one or Chapel. It is sixty feet high to the top of the battlements above twenty feet square at the base, and batters considerably diminishing to about fourteen feet square at the top. A circular staircase round a newel, within a square projection, leads to the upper stories; some of the floors have perished having been destroyed wantonly, within the memory of man. In one of the stories lies one of the bells thrown down from the floor above. It bears the inscription “ Sonus campanae nostras aures delectat”

In the story above remain two other bells, perfect with the inscription on each – “+ SCA Maria
ORA PRO NOBIS”

The fourth story of this tower was intended for a pigeon house and has its walls regularly fitted up with holes pierced all round the sides. A clerk of the parish, not many generations since, destroyed the pigeons that used to inhabit this unusual abode, by lighting a fire beneath, and suffocating them. A graceful mantle of ivy now covers all the western and southern sides. This tower may be considered a fair type of those which abound in the county of Pembroke, and taken by itself would not afford many data for an approximation to its date; but, considered conjointly with others in this district, and along the southern coast of Wales, does not appear to be older than the fifteenth century. Such towers very probably served as places of security, as well as beacons, and they now form the most striking characteristics of the ecclesiastical architecture of this part of the Principality.

On the northern side of the churchyard is an ancient house used as a school. It may have been a priests dwelling in former days of part of the ancient rectory.

Gumfreston Church in the Diocese and archdeaconry of St Davids; rural deanery of Castlemartin
The Church consists of chancel (15 feet by 12 1/2 feet), nave (41 feet by 15 feet) tomb chamber on south side of chancel (6 feet by 7 1/2 feet), tower on north side, and large porch (12 feet by 11 feet) at west end. The early social or manorial history of the parish is a complete blank, and there is nothing to denote the presence of a Welsh religious settlement in the parish prior to the erection of the Church. This was probably commenced in the early years of the 13th century The work was doubtless started at the east end, and seems to have proceeded quite regularly, though it may have been interrupted more than once in the course of the stormy half-century that followed. In due time the western gable was reached, and a porch carried up as far as the first floor. The ground chamber was rudely vaulted, and a holy water stoup placed near the doorway leading into the Church after the manner common to many ground chambers of Pembrokeshire and Carmarthenshire Church towers. An opening was made in the east wall which was also the west wall of the Church, from which the occupant of the first floor chamber could observe what was passing in the Church. This western porch or galilee is roughly roofed with stone flags. The tower is placed on the north side of the Church, the eastern wall being made to align with the dividing wall between nave and chancel. The ground plan is almost a square externally it is 18 feet north to south by 16 feet from east to west.

The foundations of the South wall are not quite flush with line of the nave wall but as the tower is given a decided batter from the ground level to the parapet, a height of 61+ feet, a steadily widening distance appears between the wall of the tower and the nave, until at the roof line, the space is sufficient to call for a small extension of the nave roof by which it is bridged, and the space between the walls filled with rough masonry The tower is crowned with a deep battlement carried up vertically from a bold corbel table; there are four embrasures on the wider and three on the narrower face. A stair turret, entered from the interior by a low square-headed doorway, projects at the north-east angle. The ground floor of the tower was a chantry or mortuary Chapel; a recess in the east wall, having a slab which projects beyond the face of the wall, probably marks the site of the altar; a larger recess in the west wall may have been intended for a tombs The chamber is vaulted the vaulting being characteristic of the period 1250-1300. Above the ground floor of tower is the ringing chamber; the second and third storeys have narrower square-headed slits; the fourth storey is fitted up as a dove-cote, and is said to have been as such until a comparatively recent date; the fifth chamber contains the bells.

Though marked by the usual simplicity of the west Wales Church towers, that of Gumfreston does not possess the stern defensive air that is characteristic of the types and there is some ground for the suggestion that it may be of slightly later date than that to which it has been assigned, and that the porch is a diversion from the original of a western tower.

The sepulchral chamber on the south side of the chancel has a groined vault with diagonal ribs springing from angles, it was probably erected concurrently with the tower; the ribs are without mouldings. It is lighted by a two-light window, having trefoiled heads which have been in part renewed. A door has been inserted the east wall, and the chamber is now used as a vestry. Before its restoration in 1870 it is said to have contained an altar tomb.

In the north wall of the nave, about mid-way between the west wall of the tower and the west end of the nave, is a semi-circular recess (now occupied by the font and heating apparatus) which has occasioned much comment. It has been regarded as a medieval baptistery, but the position is hardly that of a pre-Reformation baptistery. There can be little doubt that the niche was intended for a memorial of the 17th century.

The north side of the Church is lighted only by a small single light window, probably recent; the window at the east end has been modernised. Those of the tower are slits, except two trefoil-headed lights just below the parapet.

The font possesses no marked character, and may be of any age; it is perhaps of the late 13th century. The Church possessed a rood left, the approaches to which are visible in the east nave wall on either side of the chancel arch. There was a coloured representation of St. Lawrence on the north wall, but only the faintest traces now survive.

The original stone altar is preserved in the tower Chapel. Within the piscine for recess was formerly placed a Sanctus Bell, 8 inches high, "of good bronze metal, though cracked, and of plain workmanship, without any ornament or design on it whatever" (Arch. Camb., 1849, I, iv, 196) This now occupies a small niche within the chancel. In the tower Chapel is a 15-century Bell, dedicated to the Virgin; and in 1849 another Bell, with the inscription "Sonus campanae nostras aures delectat," is said to have reposed in one of the tower storeys (ib.). The base and shaft of a cross are standing on the north side of the churchyard. - Visited, 6th April, 1915.

Norman Church with 14c additions - tower used as watch tower when Ritic was navigable; stone benches, squint, medieval fresco[martyrdom St Lawrence].

Believe erected to meet the needs of one of the great houses now in ruins in the vicinity. The tower, the body of the Church and the font are thought to date from about the year 1300. The Tower 65" high is divided into five chambers of which "the ground floor serves as a north transept for the Church; the first floor was the ringers chamber; the second and third have windows looking North and East; the fourth is fitted up as a dove cote; and in the fifth hang the bells" (the Bell inscribed "Scta Maria Ora Pro Nobis" was cast about 1350 and is said to be one of the oldest in Pembrokeshire) In the north wall of the nave is a curious baptistery, and on the same wall are traces of frescoes usually stated to represent St Lawrence with the gridiron and other instruments of his torture, but which are more likely to depict Christ blessing the instruments of labour, a familiar subject in medieval mural painting. A Bronze Santus Bell and some 16c pewter communion vessels are preserved in a recess behind the pulpit. The chancel arch is exceptionally low. In the north transept is a squint. In the south wall of the chancel is a decorated piscina. A small Chapel, used as a vestry has a groined roof and Early English trefoil lights.

The Holy Wells of Gumfreston.

At the far end of the Churchyard are mineral springs with water said to be similar to that of Tunbridge Wells. The 12th century Church of St. Laurence, Gumfreston, Pembrokeshire/Dyfed, lies off the road from Tenby to Sageston. In its churchyard three springs rise to form a stream that flows out through a "bridge" in the churchyard wall. Although well-known and historically recorded in the past Gumfreston wells had become a local "secret" that was in danger of being forgotten as time went by.

A History of Gumfreston Wells.

This history is based on a present mixture of known and recorded facts, on-going surmise, and research by enthusiasts at St. Nicholas' Church, Penally, Brother Gildas of Caldey Island, and David Austin, Head of Archaeology at Lampeter College.

Three springs rising in such proximity would have had a strong mystical significance for the early Celts who considered the number three to be connected with divinity. Springs and bodies of water were favourite places for worship, being associated with divine and healing powers.

At the time of the travelling "saints" of Celtic Christianity, a holy man or woman could have used the wells, maybe settling there. They may have been buried there and a small Chapel built. The well water would have been consecrated and used for baptism. Gumfreston was then by the Quay on the river estuary before it silted up, that faced Caldey Island, an important spiritual centre and Monastery, and also on ancient Routes that led from the Ridgeway and St. Florence, by water and land. The whole of west Wales was a lively centre of Celtic Christianity, St. Teilo being the local saint.

There is evidence of relic-keeping in the Church, and an ambulatory, for priestly processions, which is most unusual in such light of a monastic connection between the churches of Gumfreston, Penally and Manorbier. Certainly in the Celtic Church structure these spiritual centres would have been under the care of a "mother" Church, a much larger Christian centre.

When the Normans invaded Wales in the 11th century, they changed both Church and social structures, but the holy sites and practices usually remained if firmly enough established. The present Church St. Laurence would have replaced the earlier buildings, and the earlier Saint's name, but the atmosphere of holy sanctuary and peace remained for the pilgrims who are recorded as coming to the wells for healing of body and mind. Tenby was an important port for pilgrims embarking for Europe or even further, and Gumfreston is believed to be a point of pilgrimage in itself, and a stopping-point for pilgrims "en-route".

Gumfreston Wells are listed in "The Holy Wells of Wales by Francis Jones (Cardiff 1954, p 211), as pilgrimage healing wells, and he records visits to the Wells on Easter Day, (p 90), to drop bent pins in the water. This was called "throwing Lent away" in the 17th century, recorded just before the Rector of Gumfreston was removed by the puritan authorities.

Sites of Interest RCAM.

Carn Mountain.

A field on Garn rock farm, directly east of the dwelling house. There are at present no appearances of an antiquity, but the name is indicative of a cairn having existed in the neighbourhood (Tithe Schedule, No. 227). Visited, 13th April, 1915.

Long Stone Park.

Two adjoining fields north-east of Ivy Tower, still so-called, though any maenhir which may have stood here has vanished, and left no memories behind it. (Tithe Schedule, Nos. 216-7). - Visited, 13th April, 1915

The Palace.

A field in the south of the parish on the marshy bank of the Ritec, here the boundary between Gumfreston and Penally. The name is still in local use, and tradition places on the site a small stone building, all trace of which above the soil has vanished (Tithe Schedule, No. 180). - Visited, 12th April, 1915.

Historic Houses.

Gumfreston.

A large farmhouse near the roadside in the village.

Timmins wrote in 1895: "Most visitors to Gumfreston will notice the fine old farmhouse that rises cheek by jowl with the carriage road from Tenby. If we are to believe the tradition of the countryside, this is the most ancient abode in the county. Be that as it may, the place bears traces of no mean antiquity, and is an excellent specimen of a Pembrokeshire homestead of the olden times." The earliest-known family there was that of WidLock whose members are described as lords of Gumfreston, one of whom John WydeLock the elder, was there in 1372. They bore arms sable a chevron between three lions scant argent. Afterwards it was held by a Welsh family Harry Llewelyn of Gumfreston was followed by his son John who left an only daughter and heiress, Janet, who married Owen ap Owen of Pentre Ifan, and Gumfreston was afterwards held by his son Sir James Bowen (died between 1518 and 1532). Sir James's son, John Bowen had a daughter and heiress, Elizabeth, who married Sir James Williams of Pant Howel (Carms) who is described as Lord of the Manor of Gumfreston, and lay patron of the parish Church in 1535. Five successive generations of this family were lords of the manor, until the death of John Williams in 1693, and the manor and freeholds passed to his daughter and heiress Mary who married Judge John Meyrick of Bush who died in: 1736, leaving issue. Thereafter, Gumfreston remained part of the Meyrick estate.

The Land Tax of 1786 gives John Meyrick esq., as owner of Gumfreston (farm), which passed to his descendants.

WedLock.

Home of the family of WedLock, also spelt WidLock or Wedlake. In 1359 John WideLock was a juror at Tenby and in 1362 he held two messuages in Gumfreston and WideLock worth ten marks held of John de Carew. The family were described as Lords of Gumfreston. The Williams family Porthcawl owned WedLock in the 17c and the Meyricks in 1786. Thomas Williams owned it in 1904 and it is now a farmhouse.

1834 A Topographical Dictionary of Wales. Gumfreston

This place, from its pleasant situation near the coast, and the highly medicinal Properties of some springs which are strongly impregnated with iron, has for some time been rising into consideration and is likely to become under judicious management a place of fashionable resort during the summer season. Three of these springs, all slightly differing in the Properties of their waters, but similar in their ferruginous impregnation rise in different parts of the churchyard, and at their junction form a small rivulet, which flows through the parish. The water is said to have been found highly efficacious in relieving various disorders, and it is now in contemplation to enclose the springs, and to erect a small pump-room, with other appendages for the accommodation of visitors, who, from its short distance from Tenby, and its pleasingly rural situation and appearance, are in the habit of resorting to this place for the benefit of the water.

Coal of hard quality is found in the parish, but is worked only for the supply of the immediate neighbourhood.

The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of St Davids, rated in the King's books at £9 12s and in the patronage of John Meyrick, esq.. The Church is a handsome structure, romantically situated in a richly wooded dell, where it is concealed from distant view, excepting only its lofty square tower, which forms an object of picturesque and interesting appearance. The parsonage-house, which is pleasantly situated, has been much enlarged and improved by the present incumbent, who is about to establish a Sunday school for the gratuitous instruction of the children of the parish. The average annual expenditure for the support of the poor amounts to £75. 12s.

PARISH OF Gumfreston. - The Rev. G. N. Smith, Rector, informed me that there are only three farm-houses and twelve cottages in this Parish. He had erected a school-room adjoining the churchyard, in 1836, at his own expense, which cost him £26. A schoolmaster cannot be supported here by the scholar's fees. Some from the parish go to the day-schools at Redberth and Tenby; and several from the outskirts of Tenby attend the Sunday-school in this parish. From 100 to 200 have learnt to Read the Scriptures well here during the last ten years. Farm-servants do not attend the Sunday-school. There are many of this class utterly without secular or religious knowledge. Farmers can Read and write; but there was only one in the parish that could do that well. Labourers are lamentably ignorant.

Wages are professed to be 8s. a-week; but they get only 4s. or 4s. 6d. in money; the rest in kind, such as cottages and the run of a cow. In harvest-time they get their food too; but they work so early and so late, that, taking the number of hours into consideration, they are but little better paid than in Winter. Farm-servants on an average get £6., and female servants from 50s. to £3. per year. The people are not drunken, and upon the whole are moral and steady. W Morris, Assistant. December 29th, 1846.

Names Connected with Gumfreston

The Registers Of Gumfreston Parish, By Edward Laws, esq., F.S.A.

Mr. Herbert J. Allen, our local secretary for Pembrokeshire, seeing the importance of duplicating ancient parish records, has transcribed the registers of Gumfreston. Mr. Allen asked me to collate his copy with the original, and jot down a few notes on his work.

This I have been enabled to do through the kindness of the Rev. George Massy, rector of Gumfreston.

In the first place, I wish to bear witness to the conscientiousness exhibited by Mr. Allen in carrying out his self-imposed task. The original is so faded by damp that it is hard to Read ; in a very few instances, perhaps, Mr. Allen may have misRead a word, but I have failed to find a single case of careless copying.

Hitherto, the Johnston registers, 1637, were believed to be the oldest in the county of Pembroke; but one entry was made in the Gumfreston book in 1632, thus ante-dating Johnston by five years.

The Gumfreston volume now consists of thirty -three sheets of parchment, varying in size (sixteen pages have been cut out). It divides itself into two portions: there are twenty- five pages 9 ½ ins, by 5 ½ ins., the entries on these date from 1632 to 1750 ; seven pages, measuring 10 ins. by 7 ins., entries from 1750 to 1790, one small strip is sewn on the front, containing two entries of marriages in 1733. The entries have apparently been made on loose sheets, sometimes consecutively, sometimes not; and this chronological hotchpotch evidently beat the binder, so he just put the small old sheets together and the larger new ones, leaving the Reader to make what he could of the jumble. The sheets are written on both sides.

The earliest entry stands thus :

"More births of the yeere 1632 Joan the Daughter of M and his baptised ' [Martyn Lloyd]—E: L. ' Widdower.]

This is on the bottom of the sixteenth Page, eighth sheet. My impression is that this sheet is portion of an older book, and that these older parchments were scraped down; and that several of the existing sheets are palimpsests on the older parchment.

The second entry is in the middle of the fifth Page, third sheet :

" Thomas ye son of Henry Eynon and Katherine his wife was borne upon ye first day of March 1647."

" William ye sonn of Henry Eynon and Katherin his wife was borne upon ye 20th day of July, 1658."

" Mary ye dotter of John Eice and Elizabeth his wife was baptised ye 4th day of March , 1647." Immediately following this entry we find :-

" Burials in the year 1651."

" Richard the sonne of Henry White was buried August 23."

" William Howell servant to Mr. Williams was buried about the 22nd of May." From this date until the year 1790, all years are represented by entries, with the following exceptions :

1671, 1672, 1673, 1674, 1675, 1676, 1707, 1708, 1709, 1710, 1711, 1712, 1713, 1715, 1721, 1757, 1787, 1788, 1789.

Some of these omissions are, no doubt, due to the absence of the lost pages ; and in so small a parish as Gumfreston it may well happen that certain years might pass without birth, death, or marriage; indeed, we find from an entry that such was the case in 1757.

ThRough the whole of the seventeenth century the entries are in the wildest confusion. Page five is perhaps of the greatest interest.

John Prothorough served as one of the Bailiffs of Tenby in 1646, and as Mayor in 1653; he was probably not a Tenby man by birth, as no other person of this name appears on the list.

Thomas Rogers was Bailiff in 1645, succeeded Thomas Barret (who apparently died in office) as Mayor 1665. Mayor again in 1670, when a Thomas Rogers, probably his son, acted as Bailiff. The Rogers' were a thoroughly Tenby family : we find a Richard Rogers Bailiff in 1419. They died out in the person of our J. P.'s son, Thomas , who appears as Mayor in 1693.

David Hammond's family first appear on the municipal record in 1570, and are pretty frequently repeated until 1747. Our David had been Bailiff in 1632, and Mayor in 1645.

As regards the Witnesses, Arthur Russell was certainly a man of some little local importance — he was a Bailiff in 1655 — and an Arthur Russell was Mayor in 1695, and again in 1704. John Prout is still represented in the neighbourhood, though none of the family have aspired to municipal honours.

We should like to know more about Morgan Bowen, "P'ishe register." How did Gumfreston, with its tiny population, manage to retain an educated man for this apparently un remunerative appointment? Morgan Bowen wrote a scholarly hand.

Thus we can Read between the lines, that these Justices of the Peace who usurped the functions of the Church were no myrmidons from Westminster, but the ordinary representatives of the town of Tenby.

Another interesting Page in our Gumfreston Register comes under the head of " Briefs." September ye 20th 1663. Colected towards a brife of ye twne of hexham in ye county of norethumberland ye sume of one shillinge ten pence.

In the year 1696 we find a verse introduced thus :

Henry Evans son of William Evans and Joan his wife being borne in the year of our Lord God 1696 in the month of August.

" Judge not of Death by sence lest yon mistake it Death's neither friend nor foe but as yon make it ;
Live as yon should, yon need not to complain,
For when to live is Christ, to die is gain, When should '

Perhaps the Revd. Nicholas Stokes was author of these lines.

It is impossible from the register to make out a list of the rectors of Gumfreston.
We find those mentioned run thus :

Haroldstone

Haroldston St. Issels, or East Harroldston Haroldstone

The Monastic order in South Wales 1066-1348 - F. G. CowLey.

Haverfordwest Monastery was founded by Robert Fitz Richard around 1200 there is no record of the size of the estate but the assessed value in 1291 was £17 6s 8d temporalities, there is no figure given for spiritualities.

The following Churches were appropriated to it:

Haverfordwest value £10 0 0d

Camros value £12 0 0d

Llanstadwell value £6 13 4d

St Ismael's value £8 0 0d

Dale value £5 6 8d

Haroldston value £2 0 0d

Edward Laws says that Caradoc the last of the Welsh saints was a Brecon man: quarrelling with his master he set up as hermit near Llandaff, then on an island from which he was driven by pirates and then he came near St. Ishmaels, Haroldston, near Haverfordwest. Caradoc's Well was close to the little Merlin stream on the extreme edge of Portfield.

1842 When the common was enclosed in 1842 a road was made over the well. This holy well was the raison d'être of Portfield Fair. St. Caradoc died in 1124 and was buried in St. Davids Cathedral in the left aisle opposite St. Stephen's Altar.

On the west side of Haroldston Hill is a meanhir which Giraldus says was one of those raised on the western coast of Wales by Harold after he had ravaged it. There is another on Skomer Island. The name, however, probably came from the Harold family, St Issell is a corruption of St Ismell.

1839 Topographical Dictionary of Wales

HARROLDSTON St. Issels, or EAST HARROLDSTON, a parish, in the union of Haverfordwest, hundred of Rhôs, county of Pembroke, South Wales, 1½ mile (S. E. by S.) from Haverfordwest; containing 337 inhabitants. This parish, which is pleasantly situated on the bank of the western Cleddau, appears to have derived its name from Harold, the founder of an ancient family of distinction that for several generations occupied an old seat here. By marriage with Alice, daughter and sole heiress of Sir Richard Harold, the seat passed to the family of Perrot, ancestors of Sir John Perrot, Lord-Deputy of Ireland in the reign of Elizabeth, and first High Sheriff of this county, who was a native of the place. The ancient mansion is now in a very dilapidated condition. The parish is bounded on the east by the river Cleddau, on the west and north by the parish of St. Thomas, on the south by that of Freystrop; and contains by computation ten ploughlands of the old customary acre, about half of which is pasture, and the remainder arable, with a very small portion of woodland containing a few oak and ash trees. The surface is for the most part flat, and the soil of a Brown colour, with a substratum of clay on the west, and of limestone on the east, side of the parish; producing wheat, barley, and oats. There is a small boundary stream, called Merlin's brook, on which is the village of Merlin's-Bridge, partly in this parish, about a mile and a half distant from the Church. A quarry of limestone is worked for a portion of the year, and there is a small grist water-mill.

Fern Hill, a seat here, is pleasantly situated on the bank of the river, and surrounded by thriving plantations.

The living is a perpetual curacy, endowed with £600 royal bounty, and £568 parliamentary grant; net income, £66. 10., with a glebe of from nine to ten acres; patron, James Higgon, esq..

The Church, dedicated to St. Ishmael, is a small plain building, called an "old Church" even in the reign of Elizabeth, and, with a small gallery lately erected, contains about 150 sittings. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists, with a Sunday school held in it, at Merlin's-Bridge, the most populous part of the parish. The hermitage of St. Caradoc, it is said, was in this parish; and on a common where the Haverfordwest races are held, is a well still called St. Caradoc's Well, round which a pleasure Fair, or festival, used to be annually held.

Fenton, Tours1811 Haroldston

I return, and at the entrance of the village of Cartlett cross the river by the draw bridge at the expense of a half penny a toll exacted from every passenger; thence over the Quays to a path that commences at the ruins of the priory, and following the foot of the Hill above the Priory Marsh, conducts me to Haroldstone for three hundred years the residence of one the greatest families of this county, the Perrotts, who came into possession of it by marriage with Alice, daughter and sole heiress of Sir Richard Harold. Their principal mansion before that period was Jestynton or Eastington on the Haven, but after they appeared to have been more partial to Haroldston, where they continued chiefly to reside.

The house which appears to have been a large and most incoherent aggregate of the building of different ages, and incapable of being traced to any regular plan, is now entirely in ruins. Here was born Sir John Perrott, the Lord deputy of Ireland in the reign but on account of his being at an early period of life sent up to London to take the run of the Marquis of Winchester's house, then Lord treasurer of England which was the fashionable resort of several of the young nobility and gentlemen of the first rank, and the best school at that time for forming the polite courtier, he passed only a few years of his youth there.

This sort of education, which began in the thirty sixth of Henry VIII, begot views and connections that served to estrange him from the place of his birth and the life of a country gentleman. The court was his proper sphere, and there on the accession of Edward VI we find him, where he was soon distinguished by the young Monarch being advanced to the dignity of Knight of the Bath at his coronation, and continuing ever after in his favour. In Mary's time he still followed the court; and in her successors reign was so noticed as to be first made president of Munster, and afterwards Lord deputy of Ireland which at last brought him the fate of all favourites, persecution and disgrace. He was recalled from Ireland in 1588, and in 1592 was arraigned at Westminster and found guilty of high treason, but sentence was not executed on him for his death in the Tower an end to his troubles and saved him from the scaffold.

Sir John was the son of Sir Thomas Perrott, gentleman of the bedchamber to Henry VIII and Mary, daughter of James Berkeley esq.. second son of Maurice Lord Berkeley, a lady of the court, who, as Sir Robert Naunton (who lived near his time) tells us "was of the King's familiarity, adding that if his picture, qualities, gesture, and voice be compared with that of the King's they will plead strongly that he was a surreptitious child of blood royal".

1920 Haroldston St Issels RCAM Haroldston

The mansion, of which only a few ruined walls remain, was the birth place of Sir John Perrott reputed to be a base-born son of Henry VIII, and Lord deputy of Ireland under Elizabeth. Fenton states that in his day the residence was 'entirely in ruins – a most incoherent aggregate of the building of different ages, and incapable of being traced to any regular plan (Tour 226). J H Parker assigned the house to the 13th century. 'The Hall lit at each end by a small window of two trefoil lights occupies the entire first floor. The rooms below are vaulted' (Arch Camb 1865 13). The ruins then consisted of some walls and a tower called the steward's tower of three storeys interior 11

½ ft by 10 ½ ft with a tiled saddle-back roof, a semi detached stair vice and garde-robes, terminating in a corbel table and parapet. The lower story is vaulted. The upper storeys have the remains of fireplaces and garde-robes. The lights were small plain loops. The roof and chimney have since disappeared, leaving only the shell of the tower though it was inhabited within memory. The stone stairs are much dilapidated, and the floors have gone. So far as the ruined walls permit of examination, that seem to show that the dwelling house was square on plan; it connected with the tower by an arched doorway. The mansion was surrounded by a pleasance and walled gardens now overgrown with nettles and brambles so that the whole presents a very different aspect to that described by George Owen -'ornamented with groves and otherwise boasting every appendage of luxury and fashionable life, even to pheasants' (Fenton Tour 230) – Visited 8th July 1920

The earliest part of the house is a first floor medieval Hall with vaulted under-croft, 15m by 7m, built by the Harold family of Haverfordwest around the late thirteenth century. Between the mid-fifteenth century until the later seventeenth century, Haroldston became the home of one of the most powerful and influential families in Pembrokeshire, the Perrots. During this period, the house was modernised and enlarged to the plan we see today. Two new Halls were constructed to the west of the original Hall and a service/kitchen range built to the north-east, together with a walled courtyard containing a well to the north. To the east of the original Hall a second larger walled courtyard separated the main quarters from the original gatehouse situated adjacent to the south-east corner of the courtyard. This is the best preserved building on site and is a c 5m square three storey structure with a semi detached spiral staircase which also housed a garderobe. During the seventeenth century the ground floor entrance was filled in to form a vault and the function changed to that of a self contained tower house, later known as the Stewards Tower. Following this conversion a range of buildings were also added directly to the east, over the original gatehouse approach. A rectangular structure in the south east corner of the site, adjacent to Clay Lane, is likely to be the remains of the new gatehouse.

From the eighteenth century, under the ownership of the Pakington family, the house was leased out and fell into neglect; it was largely ruinous by the nineteenth century although the Stewards Tower continued to be occupied until the later part of that century.

Surrounding the house are the earthwork remains of the original formal gardens, some of the finest Tudor gardens remaining in Wales. A detailed survey of the house and garden has been carried out by the Royal Commission.

The Parish Church dedicated to St Issel RCAM

The Church has been partially rebuilt on the old foundations. It consists of nave 28 ½ ft by 13 ½ ft, chancel 15 ½ ft by 13 ½ ft, south porch, and a single Bell-cote crowning the west gable. There is no structural distinction of chancel. In the north wall of the nave is an early blocked door. The font is Norman type it stands on a circular shaft 9in high and 50 in round; the base is modern –Visited 8th July 1920

1683 Sir Herbert Perrot of Haroldston states in his will that he had lately rebuilt the decayed Church of St Ismel at Haroldston.

This benefice was one of the churches appropriated to the Priory of St. Thomas , Haverfordwest.
An

1291, described as Ecclesia Ville Haraldi juxta Haverford this Church was assessed for tenths to the King at £2, the amount payable being 4s, - Taxatio.

There is no detailed description or separate valuation given of it in the Valor Eccl., but the yearly value of it and St. Thomas , Haverfordwest, is stated to be £11.

On the state of this Church in 1594 we get some interesting light from an entry in Owen's Pem., which translated into English, says "Haroldston alias St. Ishmells. The Church in ruins, and there are no inhabitants save in Haroldston; lately bought by Sir John Perot, and was parcel of the Priory of Haverfordwest."

Haroldston St. Issels. This parish has been denuded of its ancient plate. The present Service is of plated metal comprising a Chalice 8 in. in height; a Paten 7 in. in diam.; and a jug-shaped Flagon with broken lid.

Information from an article written by Charles E. Sinnett.

Ruins of what was once a stately Tudor mansion tucked away not far from the river a little way below Haverfordwest - Ivy clad and neglected it has remained unoccupied since before 1715 when its young mistress married and moved away. Before the Tudor mansion was built in the early 1500's, the site had long been the home of the proud Harolds or Haralds, a Scandinavian family who had come into these parts long before the Normans invaded these shores.

1301 5th March in the reign of Edward I, Sir William Harold, Knight was appointed Constable of the Castle of Haverfordwest.

1342, 20 Dec. his son another Sir William - Steward to Isabella wife of Edward III who was Lord of the Castle of Haverfordwest, was ordered to arrest the ship "Le Sant Marie" at the Old Quay Haverfordwest for non-payment of dues. This William Harold had two sons, Richard and John. The younger, John, lived at Haroldston in the west, land the family had acquired before 1307. He died childless. His elder brother, Sir Richard Harold, knight, was appointed Steward to the Lord of Haverfordwest, a position held by his father and grandfather.

1378 There is a record that in 1378 the sum of £8, a sizeable amount in those days, was recovered from him in respect of his wardship of a young lady named Jane upon her marriage to one John Nash.

Sir Richard Harold had no son, his daughter Alice who succeeded to the Haroldston estate married Peter Perrot, esquire of Eastington, Rhoscrowther Pembroke, whom she met at the Castle in Haverfordwest where he was squire to her father. Sir Richard died in the year following her marriage and Peter Perrot came to reside at Haroldston, where the Perrots held sway for almost 300 years. So came to an end the family of Harold which had survived in and around Haverfordwest for almost 450 years.

For a number of years the Perrot family remained in possession of the lordly mansion of Haroldston and many of them exerted a popular and powerful influence in the locality. There lived Sir Herbert Perrot, the protector of Peregrine Phillips, and also a later Sir Herbert whose daughter, Hester, his inheritrix married Sir John Pakington, Baronet of Westwood Worcestershire. At Haroldston during the reign of Queen Anne (1702-14) the great essayist Joseph Addison was a frequent and honored guest, and it was Sir Herbert who presented to him his beautiful model character, Sir Roger de Coverley, so exquisitely depicted in the Spectator. It was there in Haroldston at a masked Ball that Addison first met the Fair Countess of Warwick whom he after wooed and won though she proved a prize of somewhat doubtful value.

After the death of Lady Pakington in 1715 the family interest in Haroldston languished and finally the lordly mansion fell into decay.

Just outside Haverfordwest, home of Henry VIII's illegitimate son Sir John Perrot. This important ruin has been well cleared in recent years but has subsequently suffered both from structural collapse and vandalism at various points of the scattered complex. Even so, this is a very worthwhile site to visit as it has a number of typical features including an adjoining tower house (known as the Steward's Tower) and the usual barrel vaulted cellar which evidently lay beneath the Hall. Until its collapse in recent years, a particularly tall square chimney formed a notable feature. George Owen, the great Pembrokeshire historian mentions that Sir Thomas Perrot first introduced pheasants into the country in the pleasure grounds of Haroldston.

Names connected with Haroldston

Sir John Perrot 1527- 1591 - reputed son of Henry VIII and Mary Berkeley who later married Sir Thomas Perrot - probably born at Haroldston in 1527 but later resided chiefly at Carew and Laugharne.

1577. During the reign of Elizabeth I the Privy Council sent an indignant letter to Sir John Perrot cataloging the misdeeds of John Callice "whereas their Lordships are given to understand that one John Callice, a notable pirate frequenting that county and arriving lately at Milford was lodged and housed at Haverfordwest, and being there known was suffered to escape, their Lordships do not a little marvel at the negligence of such as are Justices in those parts".

Sir John Perrot - G. Douglas James.

Sir John Perrot born 1527 - natural son of Henry VIII, to whom he bore a remarkable resemblance in appearance, voice and temperament. His mother was Mary Berkeley, a lady of the Court and wife of Sir Thomas Perrot, a direct descendant of one of the Conqueror's entourage.

Born at Haroldston, near Haverfordwest - noted for his abrasive manner, swearing, ungovernable temper, great strength.

1570, 1575, 1576 - Mayor of Haverfordwest.

1563-67 MP for Pembrokeshire.

1588 MP for Haverfordwest.

1551 High Sheriff for Pembrokeshire - later Vice Admiral for west Wales - part of his responsibilities was the suppression of piracy - but there is a strong suspicion that he shared in the proceeds.

Friend of Edward VI who made him a Knight of the Bath; relationship acknowledged by Edward VI, Mary and Elizabeth. Imprisoned by Mary for favouring Protestantism and harbouring heretics at Haroldson.

One of the four who carried the canopy at Elizabeth's coronation - she appointed him Lord President of Munster to quell the Desmond Rebellion.

Also one of the wealthiest subjects of the Crown and had a great love for Haverfordwest which he endowed with a grant of property.

1591. Falsely accused of High Treason - denounced, it is believed, by Thomas Cardarn of Prendergast - condemned to death but Elizabeth refused to sign the death warrant - she resolved to pardon him but before the pardon was signed he died in the Tower and was buried in St Peter's Church there.

Perrot - According to Old Pembrokeshire Families --Henry Owen

The name is Norman-French, and is spelt in various ways, but the authentic spelling is as above given, which was followed by Sir John Perrot, the Lord Deputy, in his signature to the marriage settlement of his daughter Lettice with Rowland Laugharne, the duplicate of which is in the writer's possession curiously enough in the body of the deed the name is spelt Perrott. It is still found in France and in disguised forms in many parts of England and Wales. Most of the families of repute who bore it have tried to fasten their pedigrees on to the Pembrokeshire line an interesting and impudent example of this is to be found in the "Pedigree of the late Sir Richard Perrott, Bart.," which Fenton published in his Appendix.' Even the great William of Wykeham has been claimed for the Pembrokeshire Perrots, apparently because his niece Alice Champneys married one William Perrot, whose son took the name of Wykeham.' Robert Perrot, a famous musician and man of affairs at Oxford, who died in 1550, is said, on his monument in St. Peter's Church in that city, to have been the son of George Perrot of Haverfordwest, and from him came the Oxfordshire Perrots, who continued at North Leigh until 1765. They set up a doubtful claim to be descended from the Perrots of Haroldston but from the latter were probably derived the Perrots of Yorkshire, the most distinguished of whom was George Perrot, a baron of the exchequer, who died in 1780.

The three leading branches of the Pembrokeshire house were those settled respectively at Eastington afterwards at Haroldston, Scotsborough and Caervoriog. The founder of the house is said to have been Perrot Stephen 1183 who in the reign of Henry I acquired lands at Narberth, and married the heiress of Jestynton Eastington, but the earlier descents in the pedigree cannot be adapted to this, and furnish another proof that little reliance can be placed on any Welsh, pedigree before the 14th century.

According to Fenton,

Andrew, the son of Stephen, founded the Castle and Church at Narberth which latter he dedicated to St. Andrew, and married Janet the daughter of Ralph Mortimer, whom Fenton describes as Earl of March. Ralph, who died in 1246, was the great-grand- father of Roger the first Earl of March but this much is certain, that Narberth Castle remained for many generations the heritage of the Mortimers. Andrew's son was William, who married the daughter of Sir Walter Herford, and William's son was Peter, who married the daughter of Harry Canaston of Canaston.

Perrot Stephen 1307 son of Perrot Peter, he married Mabel, the heiress of Castleton in 1307 he was a juror at Pembroke, in 1324 he held of the Earl half a Knight's fee at Popetovsm Popton, and in 1327 was indicted for a conspiracy against Richard de Barri. He had,

Perrot John the heir who married Jane, the daughter but not the heiress, as Lewys Dwnn states of John Joce of Prendergast, and died on the 13th January 1349 he held lands at Pennar, Walwaynston Wallaston in Pwllcrochan, Osvameston Yerbeston in Monkton, and apparently at Coedraith.

Perrot Richard 1349 to whom he granted nineteen acres of land in Gravelhill Greenhill?

Perrot Thomas 1349 who founded the Scotsborough line of Perrots, probably by marriage with the heiress.

Perrot Peter 1349 the successor of John, kept up the family tradition of well-dowered wives his wife was Alice, daughter and heiress of Sir Richard Harold of Haroldston by Haverfordwest, and after the death of Sir Richard, Haroldston became the chief residence of the Perrots of Eastington. In 1373 Peter Perrot brought an instructive lawsuit against William Beneger and Isolda his wife for certain profits of a messuage and a carucate of land held by socage tenancy at Eastington, which Isolda, his father's sister, as his nearest relative who could not inherit, held as guardian during his minority. William and Isolda pleaded that the land was held by military service, under which the guardian was not accountable for the rents and profits, but a Pembroke jury came and said that the land was held in socage and gave Peter £?111 3s. damages." This is a good instance of the advantages of the ancient tenure of free and common socage, to which all tenures by Knight service were converted after the Restoration. Peter Perrot died in 1378, and his heir was his infant son Stephen

Perrot Thomas 1422 son and successor of Stephen- married Alice, the daughter of John Picton, who in 1422 granted him and his wife Alice the daughter of the grantor lands at Picton in Roose at a yearly rent of two greyhounds. There is also extant a grant by Thomas , Picton of Carew and his wife Margaret to Thomas , Perrot and Alice of six messuages, a water mill, and a carucate of land at Glinbigh' and Savilageston Sageston in a deed of gift to her son in 1463, his widow was called Joan — if this is not an error she must have been a second wife." He is probably the " Sir Thomas , Perot de-Harfordwest " who is mentioned by William of Worcester as fighting on the Lancastrian side at the battle of Mortimer's Cross in 1461.' He was succeeded by another Thomas , his son the marriages of his daughters shew the position to which the Perrots had now attained

Perrot Jane to Philip Elliot of Earwere,

Perrot Ellen to Richard Wryriott of Orielton,

Perrot Margaret to Gruffyd ap Nicholas grandfather of Rhys ap Thomas , Perrot Emma to Sir Richard Newton of Newton Weare by Lanstadwell, Lord Chief Justice of the Common Pleas."

Perrot Thomas 1464 . son of Thomas an award was given in a dispute which had arisen between his father and the Priory of Haverfordwest touching the services at the Church of Haroldston, which had been given to the Priory by Sir Richard Harold, and in the next year he had a successful suit for lands at Polcaston and High Hilton in the Lordship of Haverford. His second wife was Isabella Wogan, as appears by a grant, made to her by his son and heir William in 1474, of certain lands in the episcopal lordship of Pebidiauk for her life.

Perrot William 1487 appointed John Perrot of Haverford to be his attorney to take seisin for the Lordship of Laugharne" in 1496 he was appointed by Henry, Duke of York, Earl of Pembroke, and Lord of Haverford to be sheriff within the Lordship of Haverford" then an office for life, and in 1502 there was an award made by arbitrators in a dispute between him and John Waryn of Llawhaden as to the lands of Henry Perrot of Caervoriog, to which his younger son Jenkyn succeeded." He also married a Wogan, Johanna , and the wills of himself and his wife are extant and were proved in 1503 and 1504 respectively. They were both buried in the Priory Church of St. Thomas , the Martyr at Haverford.

Perrot Owen 1503 Sir his son succeeded, Sir William Perrot ,but did not survive long. There are several deeds by him, the latest Owen found is dated 1522. In 1516, the King, as Lord of Haverford, granted to him and his wife Catherine a lease for 21 years, at a rental of £15, of the King's Mills at Haverford, with the weir and Fishery." He must have been dead in 1524, as in that year the custody of his son Robert, during his minority, was granted by the King to two Knights."

Perrot Robert 1524 younger son of Sir Owen Perrot and Catherine would seem to be the Robert Perrot who was afterwards Reader in Greek to Edward VI

Perrot Thomas 1524 eldest son of Sir Owen Perrot and Catherine succeeded to Haroldston and married Mary Berkeley, the daughter of a gentleman of the bed-chamber to Henry VIII and granddaughter of Lord Berkeley. Mary Berkeley was the mother of the most distinguished man of the name of Perrot, but he had little right to bear the name, for he was the son of King Henry VIII, whom he much resembled in person and character. This was Sir John Perrot. As a second Husband Mary Berkeley married Sir Thomas , Johns, of Abermarlais, co. Carmarthen, who occupied Haroldston in right of his wife, and was in 1641 the first of the annual sheriffs of Pembrokeshire. He was also Knight of that shire Perrot John 1592 Sir made a Knight of the Bath at the coronation of Edward VI, Queen Mary granted him Carew in 1554 he was President of Munster from 1570 to 1573, and Lord Deputy of Ireland from 1585 to 1588, that in 1579 he was appointed Admiral of a fleet raised for the defence of Ireland, that he was condemned for treason in 1592, and died in the Tower of London in that year.

There is an excellent sketch of him in the Dictionary of National Biography.

Perrot was twice married. His first wife, Ann Cheyney, came from Kent the only issue was a son, afterwards Sir Thomas , Perrot. The second wife, Jane Pollard, came from Devonshire her mother was a Prust a well-known name in Haverfordwest and her younger sister married Sir John Wogan of Boulston. The issue of this marriage was William, who died without issue in Dublin in 1597 Lettice, who married Rowland Laugharne of St. Bride's, which she brought to her other Husbands, Walter Vaughan, of Golden Grove, and Arthur Chichester, another Lord Deputy of Ireland and Ann, who married Sir John Phillips, the first baronet, of Picton.

Perrot Thomas 1583 Sir -Sir John Perrot's son,, married in, under curious circumstances, Dorothy, daughter of Walter Devereux, Earl of Essex, who held Lamphey in this county, and through the influence of his brother-in-law, the Queen's favourite, had the estates, which had been forfeited on his father's condemnation, restored to him. Sir Thomas , lived at Haroldston in his father's life-time he was M.P. for the county in 1593, and mayor of Haverfordwest in 1586 and he and George Owen were the two deputy lieutenants for the county. He did not long survive his father, for his widow in 1594 married Henry, Earl of Northumberland.

There were two children of the marriage, a son who died young, and a daughter, Penelope, who married as her second Husband the famous Sir Robert Naunton, but left no issue. The vast Perrot estates, were resumed by the Crown on the death of Sir Thomas .

Perrot James 1571 Sir died at Haroldston without issue in 1636, by what title is not certain he never acquired it. He was buried in St Mary's Church. He sat in five Parliaments for Haverfordwest and in one for the county, and was a distinguished Parliamentary orator, and was also an author of no mean repute he was custos rotulorum of the county in 1603, and mayor of Haverfordwest in 1605, his name stands first in the roll of common council in King James ' charter to the town."

By his will, d 26th January 1636, he observed the ancient custom of a bequest to the Cathedral Church of St David's he left several legacies for the poor of the town, and devised Haroldston to Perrot Herbert 1636 son and heir of Robert Perrot of Moreton, co. Hereford, charged with an annuity of £3 to John Jessop, "preacher of the word of God" at Pembroke. These Perrots had been settled at Moreton for about a century there is nothing to show that they were descended from the Pembrokeshire family, and when Herbert and his father assumed the Haroldston arms, proceedings were taken against them in the Herald's Court by Thomas , Perrot, a London Merchant who claimed direct descent.

Perrot Herbert 1660 he was knighted at the Restoration lived partly at Haroldston, he was sheriff of the county in 1666, and M.P. for and mayor of Haverfordwest in 1677. He had three wives 1] Sibyl, daughter of David Lloyd of Kilkiffeth, and grand-daughter of the founder of the Haverfordwest Grammar School. By her he had a son Herbert, who was stabbed in a tavern brawl in Fleet Street, and was buried " in the Middle Temple Church in the round within the City of London."

2] Hester, daughter of William Barlow of Slebech, by whom he had a daughter, Hester and

3] Susan, daughter of Francis Morris. Sir Herbert died in 1683. In his will he states that he had lately rebuilt the decayed Church of St. Ismel at Haroldston, and he maintained the Perrot tradition of benefactions to Haverfordwest, and gave his lands in the counties of Hereford, Pembroke and Haverfordwest to his daughter Hester.

Perrot Hester 1683 married, as his second wife. Sir John Packington, the fourth baronet and the original of Addison's Sir Roger de Coverley.

Fenton Tours through Pembrokeshire 1811

Near Broadhaven [Fenton was travelling along Newgale sands from St David's]

After leaving the abode of my Rev. friend I proceeded by the Church of Haroldstone, pleasantly situated on the edge of a Hill, forming one side of a sequestered dingle planted with thriving young ash trees.

A little further on I alight to examine a stone pitched on end near the cliff to the right of the road, to try if I could perceive the remains of any thing like characters, on a supposition that this column, as being near the coast, and on the farm of Haroldstone, might have been one of the stones referred to by Giraldus, who says, Harold raised them on the west coast of Wales after he had ravaged it inscribed,

HIC HARALDUS VICTOR FUIT:

But though I cleansed it of the minutest lichen that adhered to it, and removed the sod at base, yet I found nothing that the most visionary antiquary would have tortured into a character of any meaning.

Harroldston west, a parish, in the union of Haverfordwest, hundred of Rhôs, county of Pembroke, South Wales, 5½ miles (W.) from Haverfordwest; containing 130 inhabitants. This parish, distinguished by its adjunct from Harroldston East or St. Issels, like it derives its name from an Anglo-Norman proprietor, who, as well as his successors, was Lord paramount over several manors in this part of the principality. The residence of the Lord was at this place, which, from the foundations of ancient buildings still remaining, appears to have been formerly of much greater extent than it is at present. The parish is finely situated on the eastern shore of St. St Bride's Bay in St. George's Channel, and is bounded by the parishes of Walton and Nolton. It comprises by estimation 1688 acres, of which 1100 are meadow and pasture, 500 arable, 73 wood, and 15 glebe land; the soil is formed of clay and mould in different combinations, and the chief produce is wheat, barley, and oats. There are three small fir plantations; and two inferior stone-quarries, not worked at present. The surrounding scenery is richly diversified, and the views from the higher grounds embrace extensive prospects over the Channel, and the adjacent country, which abounds with picturesque beauty. The rates are collected by the ploughland. The living is a perpetual curacy, endowed with £400 royal bounty; patrons, the Master and Fellows of Pembroke College, Oxford, to whom this benefice, together with that of Lambston, an adjoining parish, was presented by Sir John Philipps, father of the late Lord Milford of Picton Castle, in this county. The tithes belong to the minister, and have been commuted for a rent-charge of £120: there is a glebe of fifteen acres, arising from the bounty, and valued at £14 per annum. The Church, dedicated to St. Madoc, has a chancel window in the early English style of architecture, and measures fifty-five by fourteen feet.

1851 Aug 29 Haroldston West (St Madoc)

A small Church having only a nave and chancel with a modern west porch, and a small squared Bell gable for one Bell. One window on the north appears to have been Norman originally, but now altered; the other windows are modernised. The north door is closed. The chancel arch is Pointed, but very rude, without moulding, and much depressed. On the south side of the chancel is a stone bench; in the nave, a stone bracket. The walls are whitewashed, and there is a large growth of ivy. There is rather a pretty view from the churchyard over the sea, and the open ground is covered with furze.

St Madoc of Fern's Church restored from ruins in 1883.

The Parish Church dedicated to St Madog RCAM

This Church has been entirely rebuilt on the old foundations. It consists of a nave 32ft by 13 ft chancel 20 ½ ft by 13 ft and a Bell cot above the west gable. No ancient features were retained except the font which is of the usual cushion type. The bowl 24in square outside 19in square inside slopes of to a circular shaft on a square base. The whole has a height of 35 in. The bowl shows signs of a cover. In the south wall of the nave are traces of a blocked door. Built into a stile in the south west corner of the churchyard is the base of a cross 25in by 24in by 8in deep. Visited 16th September 1920.

The Old Parish Churches of South West Wales -- Mike Salter 1994

The scalloped font and blocked south doorway date the small nave and chancel to c1200. Most of the rest was renewed in the 19c. St Madoc, a 6th century solitary monk was a disciple of St David's and later became Bishop of Ferns. Site has been a place of worship since 6c. Church rebuilt 1883-5 by E H Lingen Barker..

Parish of Harroldston west – On the 6th of January I visited the above parish. Mr Thomas the Perpetual Curate informed me that he had been incumbent of it for the last four years, during which time there had been no day school there. He had made three attempts at establishing a Sunday School, but failed each time for want of pupils to attend. There were only 2 poor families in the parish. The children of one of those (the poorer of the two) went to Walton West school, and the other was too careless to send them anywhere. There were two gentlemen of considerable property residing in the parish. Wages were from 1s to 1s 4d in their own finding, and 8d per day with food. They were an industrious class of men but Mr Thomas could not speak more for their sobriety than so far a poverty compelled them. David Lewis Assistant

Haroldston Maenhir RCAM

An erect stone standing in the west side of Haroldston Hill. It has a height above the level of 74 in a breadth of 23in and a width of 16in. The stone does not appear to have been one of the supporters of a vanished cromlech; but it may have had some connection with the stone circle next described Visited 18th September 1920

Note – Fenton examined this stone minutely in search for “the remains of anything like characters, on a supposition that this column, as being near the coast, and on the farm of Haroldstone might have been one of those stones referred to by Giraldus, who says, Harold raised them on the west coast of Wales after he had ravaged it, inscribed “Hic Haraldus victor fuit” but found nothing that the most visionary antiquary would have tortured into a character of any meaning (tour p158)

Cliff Cottage Circle

On the side of the road immediately opposite to Cliff Cottage, and constituting part of the garden walls of Upper Lodge, are numerous boulders which formed a well defined stone circle. A few years ago they were moved, dressed and used for walling. The entrance to the circle is said to have faced north east. The southern portion was still visible about the year 1896 (Pemb Arch Survey). About 100yds to the north is the maenhir – Visited 18th September 1920

Black Point Rath (Promontory Fort) RCAM

A typical Pembrokeshire promontory or cliff Castle, which on the Ordnance survey is styled Rath, about half a mile west of the parish Church. A small headland juts into the sea; the cliffs are precipitous, and as viewed from the land there seems to be no means of descent from the enclosed area. A well curved rampart cuts off the promontory from the mainland; the chord of the arc is about 430 ft in length. The bank has a height of 10ft, with a sharp fall of nearly 20 ft to a well preserved ditch some 5ft deep. The entrance is placed at the south east end of the rampart, and the path has been narrowed by natural falls of rock – visited 16th September 1920.

Note traces of an early occupation of the site were met with by the late Rev J Philipps of Little Haven, who carried out some excavations within the enclosure. He records that “ in the space sheltered by the western bank were two hut circles, which I opened, and found at a depth of from 4 to 5ft charcoal, two stone spindle whorls, ox bones and teeth, apiece of badly baked Pottery and burnt clay floor” (Pem Arch Survey).

Castle Meadow (Hill Fort)RCAM

The discovery and location of this earthwork is due to the record of the name, Castle Meadow in the Tithe Schedule. On a field 150 yds north west of Haroldston west farm house is the ruined bank of a circular enclosure which had a diameter of about 90 ft. the bank at its best rises to a height of 4ft and has a fall of 7ft to the ground outside. The site has long been under cultivation, with the result that only faint traces of a ditch remain. The entrance has disappeared; it was possibly on the east side. This may have been a medieval cattle enclosure. Visited 16th September 1920.

Rosepool Stone

Hasguard, a parish, in the union of Haverfordwest, hundred of Rhôs, county of Pembroke, South Wales, 4 miles (N. W. by W.) from Milford; containing 122 inhabitants. This parish is pleasantly situated on the south-western part of the county, nearly in the centre of the peninsula that separates Milford Haven from St. St Bride's Bay. It is bounded by the parishes of Steynton, Walwyn's-Castle, Telbenny, and St. Ishmael's; and contains by measurement 1300 acres, the whole consisting of arable and pasture, except about 100 acres of waste land. The soil is partly of a red and partly of a grey tinge, producing the usual variety of grain, but the land is chiefly in pasture. The scenery, though pleasingly varied, is not distinguished by any peculiarity of feature; but the views from the higher grounds embrace some fine prospects over the adjacent country, having in the distance St. St Bride's Bay on the north, and Milford Haven on the south. The living is a discharged rectory, rated in the King's Books at £18. 6. 6., and in the patronage of the Lord Chancellor; net income, £170. The Church, which is dedicated to St. Peter, is not remarkable for any architectural details of importance, the style being modern; it is in length forty feet, and eighteen feet in breadth. A Church school was commenced in 1842.

The Parish Church 1920 RCAM.,

This small Church consists of a nave 42ft, by 16 ½ ft chancel 20ft by 16 ½ ft, south porch and bellcote above the western gable.

The Church has been carefully restored and the chancel entirely rebuilt. The original building probably dates from the last quarter of the 12th or first quarter of the 13th century. The chancel arch is round and narrow being only 7ft 2inches. On either side project corbels for a rood-loft. During the 1906 restoration a recess was discovered in the west side of the chancel arch. Though small for a doorway to the rood-loft, it being only 46in high and 33in wide, such appears to have been its purpose, its diminutive size being due to the low chancel arch. The head is trefoiled and the sides and curves are ornamented with circular objects which appear to be intended for Ball flowers. The west wall must at some time have shown signs of collapse, as it has been strengthened externally by a huge buttress which reaches nearly to the top of the gable, and the window, which doubtless originally occupied the gable, has been carried through the buttress; it is now built up. The extreme rudeness of the opening has given rise to the idea that it is coeval with the earliest part of the Church, but it is more probably an 18th century example of local restoration. A similar device is seen at Talbenny. All the windows are modern. The south porch probably dates from the 14th century; it has a stone bench on either side. The inner doorway is pointed; two steps descend into the Church. The font bowl is octagonal on a circular shaft; it is of the 14th century. In the churchyard is the base of a cross: -- Visited 16th September 1920

– The Church of Hasguard (spelt Huscard) was appropriated to the Priory of Pill. In the Taxatio of 1291 the name appears as Hascard.

The chancel is all Victorian but the nave has a 13c north doorway, a slightly later south porch and bellcote, and contains a 14c font.

The State of Education in Wales Hasguard. 1847

I visited this school, which is held in the Church on 15th January. I found the master and four little children ensconced in the chancel, amidst a lumber of old tables, benches and desks round a three legged grate full of burning sticks, with no sort of funnel or chimney for the smoke to escape. It made my eyes smart till I was nearly blinded, and kept covering, with ashes, the paper on which I was writing. How the master and children bore it with so little apparent inconvenience I cannot tell. The Rector of the parish is an absentee. His curate is Rector of an adjoining parish where he resides. The principal proprietor of the parish is a Clergyman; there is no resident proprietor. They subscribe nothing towards keeping a school; the present master is lodged and boarded by Mr James Griffiths, a neighbouring farmer, as tutor to his family; the day school is merely an expedient to help out his salary; there had been as many as forty of fifty in the school and even a larger number would attend (it was said) if a good school was established on the spot, which is very “central” for those who are at present without the means of instruction. “ But”, added Mr Griffiths “ I don't know how it is elsewhere ; here there's no encouragement ; we have no gentry among us to do anything . The master set three of the children to read the 1st chapter of St John's Gospel. They read fairly.

The master said that 16 of his scholars could read. Twelve could read and write; eight were ciphering, and had advanced all of them as far as the rule of three.

There had been no churchwarden in the parish for the last ten years, nor (it was believed) for a much longer period. The Rector repaired the chancel; the rest of the Church was repaired by voluntary subscriptions, yet the people continued to go to Church. There was no Dissenting Chapel in the Parish nor (a much greater subject of praise) any beer house.

There is no day-school within reach of the children. The nearest (at Talbenny, Walton west , Walwyn's Castle and St Ismael's) are all out of distance.

Haverfordwest

Haverfordwest always intrigued me. It seemed to have been built in two halves, one down near the river and another upon the tops of steep hills. To have to climb up the Hill to the library or up another Hill to the Records Office in the Castle were often difficult for me and caused to be short of breath.

This is a collection of Jottings about the town but writing it up does make me wonder. There was a Ford there the lowest on that part of the river yet there does not seem to be any remains or records going back prior to the Normans. Yet it would have been an ideal place, in my opinion, for pre Norman fortifications or even a Roman fort. Of course, until the bridge was built, it was not a place we visited from my side of the water very often as it was easier to go to Carmarthen for shopping than queuing up to cross the ferry, or go down to Swansea on the train. It was though a place I loved to explore, going down Streets with a mixture of modern and old buildings, round the old Priory, examining the wood carving in St Mary's Church. I would go the College for two half days a week and spend the rest of those days exploring.

Yes, it is a place that intrigues me.

South Pembrokeshire Place Names -- P. Valentine Harris

Haverfordwest. c.1188, Gir. Camb. Haverfordia. c.1200,

Haverforde. Probably from the name of a Norse settler, the "Ford" meaning "fjord." It has been suggested, however, that it came from haefer, (he goat), but although Fords are often named after animals, it would seem unlikely that the Ford would be used by one sex only. The borough was in someway affiliated with Hereford and to distinguish it the "west" was added.

In the writings of Giraldus Cambrensis it is referred to as 'Haverfordia'

Wade 1913 the Welsh name said to have been Caer Alun.

Barber 1802

The town of Haverfordwest irregularly built on the steep bank of the river may now be considered as the capital of Pembrokeshire; as well on account of its superior extent and opulence as from its having lately become the place of the grand session. But the Streets are narrow and dirty and so steep as to be seriously dangerous. A few good houses, among which is a residence of the dowager lady Kensington, start up here and there; but in such situations, as to convey no look of importance to the place. However commerce may have diffused wealth through the town, and proclaimed it the successful rival of Pembroke; yet, compared with the clean, placid, and respectable mien of the latter, it ensures no pre-eminence of esteem from the tourist: it may, indeed, present to him the idea of a purse proud shopkeeper strutting before a decayed gentleman.

The Castle, seated on a cliff adjoining the town, is said to have been built by Gilbert Earl of Clare, in the reign of King Stephen, and was occupied by the Flemings. Though still possessing considerable portions of its former importance, yet, en-grafted with modern additions to fit it for the county jail, it has little picturesque attractions. A wall connected with the Castle, which once surrounded the town, is still in part standing: a good Quay, customs house, a free school, a charity school, and an almshouse, are among the public concerns of this town. Of the three churches that it boasts, that of St Mary is a neat building; and its spire, covered with shingles and warped from the perpendicular, has a curious effect. A short distance southwards of the town near the river, are some remains of a priory of Black Canons founded by John de Haverford.

The Scenery, Antiquities and Biography of South Wales - Benj. Heath Malkin 1804

Built on the steep side of a high Hill so as to be highly inconvenient if not dangerous for carriages and horses and the more so as the Streets are very ill paved. There are some good houses especially in the upper part; but the irregularity of the avenues and the narrowness of all but one or two Streets with the houses piled confusedly upon one another, the lower windows of some looking down upon the roofs of others render it intricate and unsightly on the entrance, though the approach is striking. The Market here is one of the largest and most abundant in Wales, particularly for fish, in great plenty and variety. It is also a large corn Market and there is a great Fair for horses and cattle of all kinds, on the 7th of July St Thomas 's day by which they mean St Thomas a Becket the tutelary saint of the upper town.

There is a cotton mill near Haverfordwest which employs about 150 people and this is the principal manufacture of the town.

Fenton, Tours (Town) 1811

A ride of five miles brings me to Haverfordwest by the Marlan's Bridge and Poorfield. But both these names are corrupted, for they ought to be Magdalen's or Mawdlen's Bridge and Portefield; for a deed I have had occasion to examine, dated between three and four hundred years back, that common is mentioned as having belonged to one De la Porte, who granted it to the Corporation and the Mawdlens referred to as near Le Portefield.

In the field to the right of the road after passing the bridge there are the remains of an old building now nearly hidden by cottages most likely of the old penitentiary here alluded to. To the left, a little way up the hollow through which the brook passed under Mawdlen's Bridge holds its course, at the foot of the common, also the noted Cradock's well, whose sanctity and supposed virtue were derived from it having been a favourite haunt of that hermit saint whose cell was at Haroldston at the end of this dingle, then called after the name of the saint whom the Church was dedicated to, St Ismaels, or, as Giraldus calls it Isam. Here, till of late years a sort of vanity Fair was held on Easter or Whit Monday, and perhaps not discontinued even to this time.

[As to the Flemings]

We have nothing in detail, either as to the manner of their arrival, the nature of their settlement, or the number and quality of their leaders. But there is every reason to think that there were few men of Rank among them, and that they consist of a multitude of the lower orders, nearly on an equality to be disposed of as soldiers, artificers, and manufacturers at the will of the Norman chieftains who had already taken root in the country.

The town of Haverfordwest, indisputably the largest and most central in the county, was once the capital of the possessions of the Flemings, and was well situated to defend the promontory of Roos they had begun to occupy, after having driven out the natives, as being the frontiers of their newly-acquired territory, on a navigable river, and placed so as to give them full command of the more mountainous district of the county, whence alone they had to dread an alarm. It was fortified by a very strong Castle built on a rocky eminence overhanging part of the town and the river, and surrounded with an embattled wall entered by four gates, three of which I remember up and perfect; That at the entrance to Bridge Street, that opening into the precinct of the Castle at St Martin's and that at the end of the Shut Street near the Blue Boar Inn. The fourth I am informed was at the upper end of Market Street.

The town, if we take in the suburbs of Prendergast and Cartlet, is unquestionably the largest town in this county, as the whole is closely built on and cannot be seen at one view, there being several inequalities in the site, so that look at the town from whatever point you may, much of it is foreshortened. The finest view of it is on the approach to it from the Narberth or Fishguard roads. The principal part of it lies on a steep declivity, facing east with a view of the mountains sloping down to the Cleddau the western river of that name. The Streets from being so steep, particularly High St and Market-street are to strangers unpleasant for walking, and dangerous for riding, but having such a fall contribute much to the health of the place, a circumstance that more than counterbalances the trifling objections to their form and disposition.

Town Hall

The town Hall above the Market house is a respectable and commodious building, but it is to be wished it had been placed anywhere else than where it is, as it entirely obstructs the view of the east end of St Mary's Church, and takes away from the importance of that venerable edifice.

Old Town Jail

The old town jail joined the churchyard wall of St Mary's in a low and crowded part of the town, and was itself very confined; but a new fabric, free from all objections of the other, has lately risen in St Thomas ' Green, in a high and airy situation.

Free School

The town has a free school well endowed, and has maintained considerable reputation for many years, which I never pass without feeling a veneration for it, and never couple it with the name of the Rev John Whitcombe, without a degree of affection for his memory as a polite scholar and a kind indulgent master. (Fenton was a scholar at this school)

Tasker School (Howard)

Among other charitable institutions in this town, there is an almshouse and a school for the instruction and clothing of twenty four boys and twelve girls, in reading, writing and arithmetic, supported by the donation of Mrs Mary Howard, who, by her will dated August 2nd 1684, left a competent sum for this benevolent purpose

Glyndwr's Insurrection

In Glyndwr's insurrection the town of Haverfordwest was garrisoned for Henry IV, where the Earl of Arundel made so gallant a defence against the French forces which had been sent to the assistance of the Welsh insurgents, and immediately after their landing sat down before Haverfordwest, that they were obliged to raise the seige, but not before they had set fire to the town and suburbs.

There is a public walk following the summit of the Hill above the river, and the ruins of the priory open to a fine view of the mountains and other striking objects at a distance and the beautiful windings of the river just below.

John Brown History of Haverfordwest c1820

We proceed [along] Shut Street, and make our observations as we proceed. Almost all the houses in this part are miserable thatched hovels, with manure heaps to the front. Pavements are a long way in the future, for there is not even a raised causeway. Our progress, as we keep to the line of houses, is constantly interrupted by a horse-bench outside of every public house. These latter are very numerous, and from their doors streams forth an everlasting smell of new drink, for the inmates are constantly brewing. A publican being asked concerning the age of the ale he was supplying to his customers, is said to have replied that it would be a fortnight old the following Thursday week. Observe, too, how frequently we are met by people with disfigured countenances, faces ploughed with small-pox, and eyes terribly bleared, for vaccination was at that day unknown, and the dreadful disease spread like a pest, as indeed it was. "Moping idiots and madmen gay," too, constantly cross our path. Troops of neglected children playing about, girls and boys approaching adolescence, with bare feet and legs, for shoes and stockings were a luxury in that day. These would grow up heathen, were it not that Sunday Schools have been introduced, to which these poor children are brought, and religious instruction is given.

Passing down by a wretched block of houses called Rat's Island we come' to a slightly improved state of things where Dew Street commences. Here there are good residences. Fronting the west is a substantial building, partly used as a prothomolary's office, and on basement is the Butter Market. A little beyond is the town conduit, from which a lot of elderly Females are busily engaged in carrying water to the housekeepers in the neighbourhood. A scant supply it must have been. In a line with the west side of Shoemaker's Street, now Market Street, one of the churchyard gates stood fronting High Street, leaving some thirty or forty feet of the Church wall unenclosed. Against this wall, and directly fronting Shoemaker Street, we observe a low flagged bench, with a pent-house over it, on which the fishwomen, our friends "the Langums," expose their ware. This, for some reason or other, was known as " Penniless Bench." '

And at this point the crowded state of the traffic begins, for half-way up Shoemaker Street, tables and "standings" obstruct the thoroughfare: shoes and fruit and other commodities, being here exhibited. Turning the corner down towards High Street, we pass into the precincts of the Meat Market; and the street, being most inconveniently narrowed by the Shire Hall and the stores underneath where the beef is hung, is fairly blocked up. Whoever constructed the building (it stood for at least a couple of centuries), and crammed it into such a space, had a talent for packing which would not have disgraced Billingsgate. The small carcasses, Mutton and veal, were hung round the churchyard walls. There is a tradition that a tree stood in the churchyard formerly, on which meat used to be hung. The Council records speak of a shop being let in the yard to Elizabeth Angell, widow. As you may expect, the "shoving" (a local word) is terrible. Passing through, we emerge into High Street, where the space widens. The Market days are harvest time to the shops and public houses,—the Talbot, the Fleece, the Tuns, the Coach and Horses, and the Dolphin, are all upon the spot and full of customers. I fancy little but home-brewed is consumed, for spirits have hardly been introduced, and the beer of that day (it would be of the kind called tenpenny) would not much tend to intoxicate.

But the day passes on, and the country people are gone home, and the town subsides into its usual quiet. And now the frugal and homely and thoroughly enjoyable side of its life appears. The tradesfolk have been too much occupied to sit down to a midday meal, and the good wife has prepared a savoury hot supper for the family; and seated round the little "balled fire," for the use of Seaborne coal, as Holingshed calls it, has not been yet introduced, a pleasant evening is spent, fit preparation for the Sabbath, "sweet day, so calm, so pure, so bright." And so we too will quietly suspend our survey.

On the Monday going past Potters," situate just below the old ShireHall, we proceed down High Street, where most of the Independent town families lived, to a point where it diverged into two very narrow Streets again. These were called the Hack and Front Short Row. Here there lived a very miscellaneous lot of people, some possessed of means and others very poor. Opposite Hill Lane, which ran down at right angles, there was a forge kept by a well-known character of the name of Jermyn. His Smithy had two entrances, so it was a short cut from one Row to the other. Few passed through it without receiving a salutation, often accompanied with a shovelful of cinders.

At the end of the Row or block of houses thus dividing the street there was a filthy lane called Drawbridge Lane. (Here now stands Victoria Place.) This, in some seventy yards or so, led to the Drawbridge, a rickety structure kept by an old man named Robin Rees, who answered to Dickens' description to the life, and made you believe Sam Weller's theory, that post-boys and donkeys never die, but pass away from one set of miseries to another and become pike keepers, where they have plenty of opportunities of venting their spleen on other unfortunate humans.

To return to the Short Row. If, instead of going on straight towards the river, you turned abruptly to your left hand, you would pass in front of the principal hotel, the Castle, and another sharp turn landed you in Bridge Street, a then important thoroughfare, which passed, you would find another turn to the old stone bridge.

A Tour of Pembrokeshire 1823

We had good horses and a steady civil lad to drive us, son of the man who kept the Green Dragon at Pembroke. His name was Edward Jones. The entrance into Haverford west is very steep and slippery but the boy was very careful and used to the road, he soon put us down at the Castle Inn, a very comfortable nice Inn and I must particularly notice the waiter who was remarkable civil, communicative and yet not officious, attentive to everything you want. While we were waiting something to eat, Lord Beresford and suite passed for Milford Haven on the route to Waterford. We observed some fine hounds about the street and the Watch informed us that they had a subscription pack of 60 couples. After we had had a walk round the town, we sat down to a good dinner after which we had another walk and saw the Castle where the prisoners are confined and also saw several lime kilns at work. The Castle is situated on a high rock and seems a place of great strength. We returned home and had some coffee, smoked some cigars and then retired to bed – which were very good indeed and comfortable.

Nooks And Corners Of Pembrokeshire Timmins 1895

A long league's trudge still separates us from Haverfordwest; so we breast the easy slope of Drudgeman's Hill, and presently descend to Merlin's Bridge, spanning an affluent of the Cleddau. A scattered group of cottages that overlooks the stream bears some slight traces of the Chapel that formerly stood here. A kind of Vanity Fair was formerly held in the vicinity, when the country folk foregathered at Cradock's Well, a wonder working spring frequented by a hermit who had his cell at Haroldston.

The Perrots of Haroldston were great people in their time. Here dwelt the gallant Sir John Perrot, Lord Deputy of the Sister Isle in Good Queen Bess's reign; also Sir Herbert of that ilk, the contemporary and friend of Addison, who is said to have been the original of that pink of courtesy, the incomparable Sir Roger de Coverley.

Let us glance back into the past as we stroll through the clean bustling Streets of the little western metropolis.

From the earliest times Haverfordwest held a position second only in importance to that of Pembroke, as a bulwark of 'The Little England beyond Wales'

Its Castle, built by Gilbert de Clare, first Earl of Pembroke, stood as a protection to the English settlement against the incursions of the hardy mountaineers, who had been driven back by the advancing immigrants upon the wild Hill fastnesses of the interior.

The lofty walls of Gilbert's ruined Castle, dominating the town that clusters around its feet, and the medieval churches that rise amid its steep, paved Streets, recall the vanished past of Haverfordwest; while a characteristic vein of local dialect, which lingers yet despite Board Schools, attests the foreign ancestry of some of the worthy townsmen.

Curiously enough, Haverfordwest forms a county all to itself; and is further distinguished by the fact that, alone among the towns of Great Britain, the place boasts a Lord Lieutenant all its own. A privilege obtained from the Crown by a very early charter when Pembrokeshire was a County Palatine.

The town formerly returned its own member to Parliament, but of late the representation has been merged in the districts of Pembroke, Tenby and Haverfordwest.

Market day in Haverfordwest. Timmins 1895

The big travel-stained wagons of the wholesale traders, drawn by sturdy large limbed horses, trundle slowly through the crowded Streets of the old town; while the distinctive tones of the 'broad Harfat talk' greet the ear upon every side.

Wending our way down the steep High Street we bear away to the right at the bottom of the Hill and traverse one of the oldest quarters of the town. Presently we descry a low browed entrance opening upon the footpath. The massive nail studded door with its quaint lion headed knocker, being en-framed by liberally moulded jambs. Passing beneath this ancient portal we are admitted to an interior beautified by the rare old oaken staircase which gives access to nicely panelled chambers whose fireplaces retain their original blue Dutch tiles painted with scenes from Biblical history.

To the rear of the dwelling house stands a flour mill of antiquated type; yet driving, withal a brisk trade in its Green old age. A well trained old horse, the mainstay of the establishment jogs round in the mill and supplies the motive power.

Stepping out to the rear, we find ourselves upon the riverside Quay, along which we now make our way. groups of bulky stone warehouses flank the grass grown wharf, which presently opening out, reveals the Bristol Trader, a little semi-nautical inn, with its trim bit of garden abloom with hollyhocks and nasturtiums; an old time spot frequented by waterside gossips, and fraught with vague echoes from that wide outer world where men 'go down to the sea in ships'

Haverfordwest Records Events and Places

1173 Henry II visited Haverfordwest on his return from Ireland. After defying Merlin's prophecy by standing on the 'talking stone' at St David's he rode to Haverfordwest and spent the night in the Castle.

1187 Archbishop Baldwin and Giraldus preached the Crusade with great success – Rev James Phillips (Arch Camb 1898) 'The Archdeacon's eloquence was remarkably effective on that part of the audience who had not understood a word of the sermon. To crown all, a blind woman was restored to sight by pressing on her eyes some of the earth on which the archbishop had stood'

13c "The Crypt", at the corner of High Street and Market Street and opposite St. Mary's Church, was the under-Croft of a dwelling of the thirteenth century.

1200 In about 1200 Robert de Hwlffordd granted a site to the Augustinian Canons to found a priory on the low-lying land beside the western Cleddau.

1207 Robert de Hwlffordd was given the right to hold a Fair and a Market, in the town in 1207. The Market was held on Sundays in Queen's Square, but later on Saturdays

1217 Llewelyn ap Iorwerth and threatened the town – only averted by the intervention of the Bishop and the promise of a heavy ransom and twenty hostages from Rhos and Pembroke of the 'noblest'

1220, Llewelyn ab Iorwerth, Prince of North Wales, taking advantage of the absence of the Earl of Pembroke, who had been appointed by Henry III. to the command of his forces in Ireland, laid waste the territories of that nobleman in Wales, and extended his ravages to this place, but was unable to make any impression on the Castle.'

1246 The Dominican (Black) Friars obtained donations from Henry III, in 1246, to establish a friary at Haverfordwest on a site that has not been identified. In 1256 they moved to a more convenient site, on the banks of the western Cleddau, behind Bridge Street.

1246 Leper hospital recorded at bottom of Merlin's Hill.

At Merlin's Bridge, on the south side of the town, was a Chapel dedicated to St. Magdalene and a leper hospital. The name of the bridge was corrupted to Maudlyn's Bridge and later it became Marlan's Bridge before assuming its present form.

1264 Humphrey de Bohun fortified the town with walls stretches of which still remain in Castleton, as the area around the Castle was known.

There is some question about the number of Gates, Phillips (Arch Camb 1898) states that there were four gates; the South Gate near the upper end of [Street; The west Gate , at the lower end of Dew Street between the Fish Market and the Grammar school; the North Gate near the 'Rising Sun' in North St; and the Red Gate on the bridge and that only in two places does any portion of the old walls remain; On the North Parade , near the Wesleyan Chapel, and behind the gardens of Harford Terrace in Quay St.

Another source states that there were five gates: St. Martin's Gate, North Gate, East Gate, South Gate at the upper end of Market Street, and West Gate, in Dew Street.

Wade (1913) states that 'Early Records imply there were once six gates and that the sites of five are known being the south at Market Street, the west in Dew St, the East of St Martin's at the bottom of Church Street, the North near the spot that still bears that name and the Red gate at the bottom of Holloway..

1276 The 'Gate Keepers of Haverford' arrested and handed over to the King; Eleanor, the daughter Simon de Montfort and one of her brothers. She had come from France to marry Prince Llewellyn her fiancé. King Edward (her cousin) held her prisoner for two years but then released her to marry Llewellyn.

1284 'The town of Haverford recovered, before the Justices of the Lord King, sitting at Haverford as a tribunal, the liberties of which William de Valence Earl of Pembroke had long despoiled the town'

1289 Humphrey de Bohun III exchanged the Castle with the queen, Eleanor of Castile, wife of Edward I, and she spent large sums of money on restoring the towers and the curtain walls. From now onward, the Castle and the lordship remained mostly in royal hands. Edward I gave it to his son, the first English Prince of Wales. Edward III gave it to his mother, Isabelia of France, and in

1343, it passed to her grandson, Edward the Black Prince

1291. The monastic order in South Wales 1066 -1348 - F. G. CowLey

Haverfordwest Monastery was founded by Robert Fitz Richard around 1200 there is no record of the size of the estate but the assessed value in 1291 was £17 6 8d temporalities, there is no figure given for spiritualities.

The following Churches were appropriated to it:

Haverfordwest value £10 0 0d.

1304 September. 29th a complaint by Wm. Pierre, Merchant of Majorca and Domingus Peris, Merchant of Seville, of the illegal seizure of their ship and cargo, coming to England to trade, by several Masters of English ships, amongst others Richard Parkemer, master of La Note of Haverford.

1324. 360 burgages.

1349 Black Death - decimated the population of the town

Late 1300's Richard II. honoured the town with his presence, and conferred upon it many valuable privileges: during his stay he confirmed a grant made by Robert Niger, of a burgage in Haverfordwest, to the Friars Preachers.

14c ? Quay St Tower House A medieval vaulted tower house, with walls of random rubble and seventeenth century roof trusses. It was relocated to St Fagan's in 1983. The building is best understood as a Quayside storehouse with accommodation above. It has now been re-erected at The National History Museum, St Fagans. A BBC documentary tells the story of its historic context and its re-erection at St Fagans: 'Brick-by-brick: rebuilding our past' (Series 1, episode 3) first shown on 20 April 2012 and presented by Dan Cruickshank and Charlie Luxton.

1400c In the reign of Henry IV., the command of this fortress was entrusted to the Earl of Arundel, who valiantly defended it against the assaults of the French auxiliaries whom Charles VII. of France had sent over to the aid of Owain Glyndwr. These forces, immediately after landing at Milford advanced to this place and laid siege to the Castle, but they experienced so formidable a resistance from the garrison, and sustained so considerable a loss in their numbers, that, after setting fire to the town and suburbs, they were compelled to abandon their attempt to reduce it.

1404-5 In the Reeve account of the town of Haverford, 6s is allowed for the custody of the six gates of Haverford.

1477. First evidence of a fulling mill is in 1477 when the site of a pandy called "Ancellislade" was arrented. (Cal of Public Records relating to Pembrokeshire, I, 97).

1485 August Henry of Richmond (later Henry VII) entered Haverfordwest amid great rejoicing

1485 The Ford which is referred to in the town's name was a little above the site of the new bridge Friars Lane and was the chief crossing for the traffic between Roose and Dungledy. This was the "Ford" of Haverford, which Henry Tudor crossed with his army, after landing at Dale in August 1485, on his way to Bosworth Field where he defeated Richard III and became King Henry VII, the founder of the Tudor dynasty.

1485 After the victory at Bosworth Field, Henry VII conferred Haverfordwest on his uncle, Jasper Tudor, Duke of Bedford and Earl of Pembroke He died in 1495

1495, the lordship returned to the royal line in the person of Henry, Duke of York, later Henry VIII. He gave it to

1532 Anne Boleyn when he made her Marquess (the title then used, and not Marchioness) of Pembroke in 1532

16c Haverfordwest had 8 guilds including Glovers, Feltnakers, Tailors and Saddlers.

1536 the lordship was abolished, under the Act of Union which stated that "the lordship of Haverford shall be united, annexed and joined to and with the County of Pembroke

16th century almshouse, demolished 18th century

1535 - 6. At the Dissolution, Haverfordwest Priory had a fulling mill in "le Mawdlynes" on "le Priors Hyll" leased at will, along with a meadow and a small close to Henry Cathern and John Sutton for 32s a year. (SC6 Henry VIII, 5280, m.1d)

Acc/to Dyfed Archaeological Trust (site report 267): On the site of an existing mill building east of St Thomas ' Hospital; medieval footings have been found.

1536 St Thomas 's Augustinian Priory at the time of its dissolution in 1536; said to be haunted by the ghost of a monk.

1543 The status of the town was reaffirmed by the Act of Union in 1543,

1558 April 9th William Nichol was burned at the stake in High St near the entrance to Dark St

1563 the tolls on the fish Market,, amounted to £4, and those of the beef shambles to £7.13.7, but £2.16.8 had to be spent on repairs.

1566 charter of Queen Elizabeth gave to the Corporation for twenty one years 'the rectory and advowson of St Mary, the Haverfordwest mills, certain tenements, with rights on the forests of Narberth and Coedrath'

1577. Letter from the Privy Council of Elizabeth 1 to Sir John Perrot cataloguing the misdeeds of John Callice.

"Whereas their Lordships are given to understand that one John Callice, a notable pirate frequenting that country and arriving lately at Milford was lodged and housed at Haverfordwest, and being there known was suffered to escape, their Lordships do not a little marvel at the negligence of such as are Justices in those parts".

1610. Status of the town renewed by James I

The affairs of the town were governed by a common council the members of which would be "Twenty-four of the honestest men of the town" . The mayor, who was appointed annually, was also a magistrate, coroner, escheator, clerk of the Market and admiral of the port, and the sheriffs, bailiffs and sergeants at Mace had to attend upon him whenever necessary "in their gowns and civil apparel and not in cloaks or any apparel of light colour not befitting their place", on pain of a penalty of 10s. Haverfordwest had a sheriff because it was a county, a privilege it shared only with the town and county of Carmarthen in Wales. As such, it had its own Member of Parliament and a Custos Fiotulorum, or Keeper of the Rolls, and, from 1761, it had its own Lord Lieutenant.

1610, a Tuesday Market was added. By then, Haverfordwest had "the greatest and plentifullest Market of the shire", held in St. Mary's Churchyard and Pillory Street, as the lower part of Dew Street was then known.

1610 Two more fairs were established by charter in 1610: the May Fair and St. Bartholomew's, which was held on 24 August.

1615 The town Quay was rebuilt by John Baetman mayor of Haverfordwest. He petitioned John Hoskins the King's Majesty's chief justice of Pembrock, Carmarthen, Cardigan and Haverfordwest in 1623 for the remainder of the money, £7, which he was owed. The Common council was rebuked by John Hoskin. Haverfordwest Corporation MS530.

1625 Mariners' Square is named after the "Mariners' Inn", now the Hotel Mariners, the town's leading Hotel which dates from 1625. A 1797 print shows the building, much as it is, with a fox on the roof having escaped from the hounds below

1626 Roger Walter was three times Mayor and on his death in 1626 left an estate of £689 - the largest estate in the town at that period.

1644 During the civil war in the seventeenth century, the Castle was garrisoned for the King by Sir John Stepney, but was never regularly besieged; the garrison, apprised of the rapid successes of the Parliamentarians in the surrounding country, hastily withdrew, leaving behind them their ordnance and all their military stores and ammunition.

1790 Foley House, Haverfordwest is a detached 2 storey villa designed by John Nash c. 1790 for Richard Foley, advocate. It is a rectangular villa raised on a basement with pediments on three sides. There is a circular window in the tympanium and two semi-circular headed arches on the ground floor. The plan is similar to that of Nash's The Priory at Cardigan with the staircase on the front wall immediately next to the entry, and a principal room in a canted end bay overlooking the garden. The house was sold in 1947 to the County Council for a town museum although it was not used as such and was progressively damaged thereafter. It was poorly refurbished in later 20th century with re-roofing in concrete tiles, removal of chimneys, loss of the moulded timber base of the pediment and eaves each side and replacement of the front door. The garden fronts are less badly affected.

1791 Records Office/Fish Market-street Built in 1791 and demolished in 1951. A 2 storey building with walls of rubble, rendered on the side and rear walls. The front wall had coursed squared rubble to the ground floor and ashlar grooved stucco to the first floor. Four pointed-headed arched doorways to the front, with 4 sash windows above. The interior of the ground floor was vaulted. The first floor had an axial arcade with fluted capitals.

Water Supply to Town Topographical Dictionary of Wales Lewis 1800c

The Town, which may be regarded as the modern capital of Pembrokeshire, is finely situated at one of the inland extremities of Milford Haven, upon the declivities, and at the base, of very steep hills, round which the western Cleddau flows. It consists of numerous Streets, some of which are regularly built, and contain the town residences of many of the neighbouring gentry; others of the Streets are steep. The inhabitants are partially supplied with water from Portfield, and the "Fountain Head" on the road to Milford: the water is brought from the Fountain Head by pipes into a public conduit; and also to private houses, on the payment of a small annual rate to the lessee of the Corporation, by whom this plan for supplying the town was carried into effect about a century ago.

1813 The Pembrokeshire Hunt, established in the year 1813, and which is supported by the principal gentry of the county, has its meetings at this town, where a pack of fox-hounds is kept. The hounds go out twice every week during the season; but in the second week in November, called the "Hunt Week," the members assemble in the town, and the hounds are out three days, namely, Monday, Wednesday, and Friday, on the evenings of which days a Ball is held at the assembly-rooms.

1824 Haverfordwest Cricket Club is possibly the oldest Cricket Club in Wales founded. It acquired its first ground at the 'Old Race Course' in 1839.

1825 A very substantial Market-house was erected by the Corporation in 1825, at a cost of about £5000, of which part was expended in the purchase of four houses and gardens in Market-street, to form, with four pieces of waste land belonging to the Corporation, a site for the building. It is a spacious quadrilateral edifice, conveniently fitted up, and containing covered shambles for eighty butchers, with ample accommodations for the sale of poultry, butter, vegetables, hardware, and various other articles. There is also a convenient Market-place for the sale of fish. The town is abundantly supplied with provisions, and is especially famed for the quality of its Mutton.

The Market House was demolished in 1937.

1829 The Pembrokeshire races are held adjoining the town, annually, in the autumn. They were originally established about eighty years ago, but afterwards partially abandoned; in 1829 they were re-established. They are liberally supported, and in general well attended; the members for the county and the borough each give a plate of £50, and a £50 plate is also given by the tradesmen of the town, exclusively of sweepstakes, contingent on the amount of subscriptions.

1835 Acts of Parliament for improving the town were obtained in 1835 and 1836: the plan embraces the removal of certain obstructions in the line of a new street, to be formed in continuation of the High-street, to Cartlet bridge, on the other side of the river, a distance of a quarter of a mile; the erection of a new bridge across the Cleddau, and the improvement of the other approaches; lighting the town with gas, the supply of the upper part of it with water, and the construction of a common sewer: alterations that will materially contribute to the improvement of the town, and render it in every respect worthy of the distinguished rank which it holds among the chief towns of the principality. The views from the higher grounds are extensive, and along the summit of the Castle Hill is a public walk, overlooking the river and the ruins of the ancient priory, and commanding a prospect of the surrounding country.

1835 The Shire Hall at the bottom of High Street, It was built in 1835 on the site of a Quakers Meeting House, that then moved to the New Quay. A row of houses, known as Short Row, stood in the middle of the street "before the Shire Hall" until it was removed in the 1830s. It was built for the assize courts, to the design of William Owen of Haverfordwest and it formed part of the redesign of the centre of the town undertaken by William Owen from 1832-40. The clock was added in 1888 in memory of W. Vaughan James JP, for 100 guineas. The interior was altered in 1900-01 by Arthur Thomas, to create a council chamber. It was used as the county council offices for much of the twentieth century and latterly as a court house. It has been disused since 2002. It is a Classical style two-storey painted stucco building with twentieth century metal sheet roof cladding. It has a five-bay front, divided 1-3-1 bays, the centre pedimented with giant Ionic pilasters and entablature and the sides with cornice only of entablature and parapet. There is a broad moulded sill band between floors with 12-pane hornless sashes to the upper floor. The ground floor openings are all arched, with three arched windows in similar architraves, and big outer doors. It is listed Grade II as one of the most distinguished early nineteenth century public buildings in the region.

1837-39. St. Thomas 's Hospital /workhouse, originally a workhouse, slate gabled roof, stone rubble

1837 The New Bridge was built in 1837 with the houses built in Victoria Place in 1839, it formed an impressive entry into the town faced with ashlar. Moulded cornice. Capped parapet. 19th century lamp standards - circular iron shafts.

1838 Portfield Fair was a hiring Fair held on 8 October on Portfield Common, and it is said to have "absorbed the ancient Vanity Fair held there around St Caradoc's Well". When the common was enclosed in 1838 the Fair was transferred to St. Thomas Green, where it is still held each year, as is the May Fair.

The name Portfield first appears in the thirteenth century as "Portefelde", meaning an open field belonging to the town. It has an association with the de le Poer family, one of whom was enobled, in 1786, as Baron Tyrone of Haverfordwest and was later created Marquess of Waterford in the peerage of Ireland, but the Marquess sits in the House of Lords as Lord Tyrone of Haverfordwest.

1838 the Portfield Inclosure Act allotted to the Mayor and Corporation land "for a place of recreation and exercise for the neighbouring population". Some 250 acres of the remaining land was allotted to the Trustees of "the Freemen of the borough of the Town and County of Haverfordwest".

1839. Victoria Place forms part of a development at the entrance of the town by William Owen including the New Bridge and two terraces facing each other, they were completed in 1839. The town improvements began as a result of a special Act of Parliament of 1835, but the terraces were named in commemoration of the accession of Queen Victoria in June 1837. Augustus John, though born in Tenby, was brought up in Victoria Place, and his sister, Gwen John, was born there. A print of 1878 shows toll-gates across the road.

1847 A literary and scientific association was established in the spring of the year 1847, now consisting of about 150 members; a good library and reading room are attached, and lectures are delivered during the Winter season. Theatrical performances occasionally take place by itinerant companies, though no particular building is appropriated to that use; and meetings are held at the assembly-rooms, which, while possessing no exterior attractions, are considered as the best Ball-rooms in South Wales.

1848 In the year 1848 a substantial corn-Market was built by the Corporation, at a cost of about £2000. The annual meetings of the Pembrokeshire Agricultural Society are held here, in a new show-yard or cattleMarket, of two acres, at the top of Barn-street, surrounded by a high wall.

1872 The Masonic Hall in Picton Place, with its Corinthian portico and pediment, was built

1883 The Churn Works, Northgate, Haverfordwest, were built by John Llewellyn (a cooper) between 1883-1888, by which time the butter churns produced by him were regarded as of first-rate quality all over the country and later the world. In about 1900 the works included saw-mills, a drying kiln, drying sheds and a corn mill. Power came from a 15hp steam engine, in the early part of the 20th century, a series of large factory churns and butter workers were manufactured. In the 1930's they were installed in most of the larges dairies in the country. During the Second World War the firm made carts, etc. for the army: thereafter most of the business was retail and repair only. In 1966 the property was leased to an agricultural Merchant and in 1976 it was bought by the District Council. The main building was of local rubble masonry in lime mortar with aslar quoins and segmental arched brick heads to the windows. The hipped roof was slated. The buildings were demolished in 1987 to make way for a roundabout.

1888 St Mary Street Chapel was built in 1888 with a stuccoed pedimented frontage and slate roof. In 1974 this Chapel was converted for use as a social club.

1907 The Drill Hall Haverfordwest, was a single storey building with 2-storey sections either side. It was built for the Pembrokeshire Yeomanry and 4th Welsh Regiment. Demolished 1990.

1942 Haverfordwest Airfield (WithyBush), one of the wartime runways has been withdrawn from use and the other two have been reduced in length to make way for a public road on the north side of the airfield. The seventeen dispersal points and the refuelling area are still visible in grass areas. Original buildings on the southerly side of the airfield include one of the T2 hangars. The RAF control tower is still extant but has a new sloping roof. Other surviving structures around the airfield include Nissen and Maycrete huts, and a guard room. The wartime buildings associated with maintenance and a Blister hanger were demolished during bypass improvements to the A40

1972 The Gorsedd Circle in the Bridge Meadow was erected for the Proclamation of the Royal National Eisteddfod of Wales that was held in Haverfordwest in 1972.

Topographical Dictionary of Wales* Lewis The Port

The Port is dependent on that of Milford to which it is a creek, having a custom-house subordinate to the establishment there. From its central situation it attracts considerable trade, chiefly coast-wise: the exports are principally oats and butter, with a small quantity of leather and bark; the imports are chiefly groceries, manufactured goods, and other miscellaneous articles, for the supply of the shops.

Coal

is brought by water from Newport in Monmouthshire, &c.; but the poorer inhabitants for the most part use culm, obtained from a distance of about three miles: the hard or stone coal, for malting, procured about five or six miles off, is here shipped to the southern coast of England, and even to London.

A great number of native cattle are sent from the neighbouring district for sale to the English Market. The river is navigable to the bridge for barges, to a lower part of the town for larger vessels, and to a place immediately below the town for ships of 250 tons' burthen. A steam-vessel plies to Pembroke-Dock, Milford Tenby, and Bristol. The trade of the town consists chiefly in the supply of the inhabitants and the neighbourhood with various articles of home consumption, and its commercial intercourse is facilitated by its situation on the road from London to Milford. The great South Wales railway, if completed, will have a branch of more than five miles to Haverfordwest, the opening of which will tend much to the improvement of the district.

The Markets are held on Tuesday, Thursday, and Saturday, the last of which is for corn; and during the three Winter months an additional Market is held, every Thursday, for the sale of cattle. Fairs for the sale of horses, cattle, sheep, and pigs, are held annually on May 12th, June 12th, July 18th, August 9th, September 4th and 23rd, and October 18th.

Haverfordwest, standing on the tidal limit of the western Cleddau, became one of the leading ports in South Wales in Tudor times, exporting wool, hides, corn, malt and coal. The Wool Market, on the Quay, is a reminder that Haverfordwest was declared a staple town in 1326. The main imports included salt, iron, Wines from France and Spain, and apples from the Forest of Dean. The Bristol Trader public house takes its name from a type of vessel that traded between Bristol and the Pembrokeshire ports. The coming of the railway in 1853 caused sea trading to go into a sharp decline, although vessels brought their cargoes up river up to the last war.

Administration Topographical Dictionary of Wales Lewis

The town, which has received various privileges from Henry II., was subsequently honoured with charters from the crown in the 1st and 9th of Richard II., 2nd of Henry IV., 2nd of Henry V., 8th of Henry VIth, 5th of Edward IV., and 24th of Henry VIII.; and these grants, with others, perhaps, of which no record is extant, were confirmed by the statute 34th and 35th of Henry VIII., c. 26, s. 124, by which it was also enacted that the town should be a county of itself, as it had been constituted by Edward IV. charters were afterwards granted in the 1st of Edward VI., 1st of Queen Mary, 2nd of Elizabeth, 2nd and 7th of James I., and 6th of William and Mary; but of these grants, that of William and Mary only included permission to hold three fairs annually and a weekly Market on Thursday, leaving the previous charters undisturbed.

By the last charter of James I. it was enacted, amongst other important things, that the sites of the priory of Black Canons and house of Friars Preachers, the Hill called Prior's Hill, the prior's marshes, and the friars' gardens, situated within the limits of the town, should for the future be esteemed part of the said town and county of the town of Haverfordwest. This charter was the governing one until the passing of the Municipal Corporations' Act. Under its provisions, the style of the Corporation was, "the Mayor, Sheriffs, Bailiffs, and burgesses of the county of the town of Haverfordwest," and the control was vested in the mayor, sheriff, two bailiffs, and twenty-four common councilmen (who were justices of the peace, and of whom fifteen were at first styled aldermen), assisted by a town-clerk, chamber-reeve, two serjeants-at Mace, and other officers.

By an ancient grant of the crown, made while Pembrokeshire was a county palatine, Haverfordwest enjoys the privilege of having a Lord-lieutenant of the town and county of the town, which is possessed by no other town in Great Britain.

By the Act 5th and 6th of William IV., c. 76, the Corporation is styled the "Mayor, Aldermen, and burgesses," and consists of a mayor, four aldermen, and twelve councillors, forming the council of the borough, which is not divided into wards, and of which the municipal and parliamentary boundaries are the same. The council elect the mayor annually on Nov. 9th, out of the aldermen or councillors; and the aldermen triennially out of the councillors, or persons qualified as such, one-half going out of office every three years, but being re-eligible: the councillors are chosen by and out of the enrolled burgesses, annually on Nov. 1st, one-third going out of office every year. Aldermen and councillors must possess a property qualification of £500, or be rated at £15 annual value. The burgesses consist of the occupiers of houses and shops rated for three years to the relief of the poor. Two auditors and two assessors are elected annually on March 1st, by and out of the burgesses; and the council appoint a sheriff, town-clerk, treasurer, and other officers annually on Nov. 9th. The members of the council are exempt from serving on juries within the borough, and the burgesses from serving on juries of the quarter-sessions for Pembrokeshire. The revenues of the Corporation are derived from the rents of houses and lands, from tolls, standings in the Market, &c., and produce about £1000 per annum; the Corporation also possess part of Portfield, or Poorfield, a large meadow situated within the borough, and containing about 1000 acres of land, for the enclosure of which an act was passed in the parliamentary session of 1837-8.

Haverfordwest first received the elective franchise in the 27th of Henry VIII., when its superior importance caused it to be endowed with this privilege in lieu of its being conferred on the Merionethshire boroughs, and since that time it has continued to return one member to parliament. The right of election was formerly vested in freeholders of 40s. a year, inhabitants paying scot and lot, and the burgesses; but the act for "Amending the Representation of the People" vested it in freeholders in fee or fee tail of 40s. per annum, in the then existing freeholders for life or lives of 40s., in after-freeholders for life or lives of £10, in the old burgesses resident within seven miles, in male householders occupying premises of the annual value of £10, and in scot and lot inhabitants for their lives, provided they be capable of registering as the act demands. The towns of Fishguard and Narberth, and the villages of Prendergast and Uzmaston, are now entitled to share in the representation, the towns being made contributory boroughs, and the villages being comprised in the borough of Haverfordwest. The number of houses of the annual value of £10 within the limits of the borough, is 361. The sheriff of Haverfordwest is the returning officer.

Town Area Topographical Dictionary of Wales Lewis

The town and county of the town comprise the whole of the parish of St. Mary; part of the parishes of St. Thomas, St. Martin, Prendergast, and Uzmaston; and the large extra-parochial area called Poorfield. In the parishes of St. Thomas and St. Martin are divisions respectively called the hamlets of St. Thomas and St. Martin, within the hundred of Rhôs.

The living of St. Mary's is a vicarage, endowed with £20 per annum chargeable on the tithes of the parish of Tremaen, in the county of Cardigan, under the will of Mr. Laugharne (who represented the town in parliament for fourteen years), dated in 1714, for reading daily prayers; also with £200 private benefaction, £200 royal bounty, and £200 parliamentary grant. It is in the patronage of the Rev. Thomas Watts. The Church, situated at the upper end of High-street, is a spacious and venerable structure, in the early style of English architecture, with a low tower, which was anciently surmounted by a spire of elegant proportions. The interior consists of a nave, chancel, and north aisle. The nave is lofty, and ceiled with panelled oak, richly ornamented with carving; it is lighted on each side by a range of clerestory windows, of various character, and is separated from the chancel by a pointed arch, supported by clustered columns, and from the north aisle by a series of similar arches of lower elevation, resting on clustered columns having capitals richly ornamented with sculpture. The east windows of the chancel are lofty and highly enriched with tracery; and the windows of the north aisle, which are similarly embellished, are of good proportions and elegant design. In the chancel are some monuments of splendid character, to various members of the family inheriting the neighbouring seat of Picton Castle. This Church was judiciously restored in the year 1844.

The living of St. Thomas ' is a rectory not in charge, in the patronage of the Crown: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £180, besides which, there is a glebe of fourteen acres, valued with appendages at £76. 3. per annum; also certain buildings, &c., estimated at £44. 7. per annum. The Church is situated on the summit of a Hill, and in the centre of an extensive cemetery, overlooking the ruins of the priory. According to some records preserved at St Davids, it appears to have been built in the year 1225; but these most probably refer to the ancient Church of the priory, which was also dedicated to St. Thomas, for there is nothing in the style of architecture to corroborate that testimony. It is a plain building, with a square tower having a projecting battlement.

The living of St. Martin's is a perpetual curacy, endowed with £1200 royal bounty, and £1200 parliamentary grant; net income, £80; patron and impropriator, James Griffiths, esq.. The Church, supposed to be the most ancient in the town, is a venerable structure, displaying portions in the early style of English architecture, with a low tower surmounted by an elegant spire. It consists of a nave, chancel, and south aisle, but has suffered so extensively by the insertion of windows and other alterations, that little of its original character remains. The nave and chancel are long and lofty, and are separated by a fine old arch, which reaches to the roof; in the chancel, on the southern side, are some ancient stalls in recesses.

There are places of worship in the town for Baptists, Independents, Calvinistic and Wesleyan Methodists, Moravians, and Presbyterians.

Charities Topographical Dictionary of Wales Lewis

Sir John Perrot, (see below) in 1579, by deed gave certain houses, lands, and fee-farm rents, in the parish of Camrhos, Pembrokeshire, and in the parishes of Haverfordwest, now producing £213 per annum, for the repair of the roads, walls, bridges, and Quays; for the general improvement of the town; and supplying it with water.

James Haward bequeathed an annuity of £22, payable out of an estate in the parish of Merton, in the county of Surrey, for the augmentation of Haverfordwest hospital; which annuity, as no such hospital has existed for many years in the town, is divided by the Corporation among the poor.

William Vawer, by deed in 1607, gave houses, lands, and fee-farm rents, in the parish of St. Mary, Haverfordwest, and in the city of Bristol, now producing £161. 14. per annum, towards the support of nine decayed burgesses of this town, each of whom receives 5s. per week, and a coat at Christmas, of the value of one guinea, which sum is also paid to the minister of St. Mary's, and for a dinner.

Anne Laugharne bequeathed an annuity of £6, payable out of an estate at Boulston, near this place, for the relief of four aged women of honest fame in the parishes of St. Mary and St. Thomas

Mary Tasker, otherwise Howard, bequeathed, in 1684, certain farms and lands in the parish of Camrhos, now producing £133. 14. per annum, for the erection of an almshouse, and for the education of poor children of both sexes in Rudbaxton, Steynton, and Haverfordwest. A boys' school is supported from this endowment; the master receives a salary of £54. 12. per annum, and there are fifty boys on the books, all of whom are clothed every year.

Connected with the school is the almshouse, containing nine rooms, for as many poor women, who receive 5s. annually. Another almshouse, in St. Mary's parish, called the Lower almshouse, containing seven rooms, occupied by as many poor women, is kept in repair by the Corporation.

Richard Howell in 1697 bequeathed £400, the interest of which, £20, is distributed by the mayor and council on the first Wednesday in December, among the poor inhabitants, in sums of 5s. each, and also to the inmates of the almshouses.

In 1723 Owen Phillips gave £40 to the Corporation, the interest of which is annually given to a widow.

In 1751 an unknown donor gave £100, the interest of which, from the three and a half per cents., is distributed by the vicar, in Bread, among the debtors in the gaol, according to the will of the benefactor.

The vicar has also the distribution of 35s. among the poor at Christmas, from a bequest of £50 by Martha Bowen, in 1749;

and among the same are shared £5, arising from a bequest of £100, by William Fortune, in 1764; £10, a rent-charge, granted by William Wheeler;

another of £1, by William Meyler; and another, in 1707, by Thomas Roch, of £3. 10.

William Middleton, a Merchant of London, gave £100 for apprenticing four poor children out of the town; and in addition to these several charities are numerous others, of which the greater part have been lost by failure of securities in their investment, or by other accidents. Of these may be noticed, £200 bequeathed by Rebecca Flaerton, in 1744, for the relief of aged widows, on the nomination of Robert Prust; £80, given in 1739, by Mary Llewelyn, for such charitable purpose as should be recommended by the same person; a bequest of £10, by Ann Bowen; an annual sum of £5, by Captain Parr, in 1811, to the poor of St. Thomas 's parish; and various other donations, which appear to have been for a considerable time unavailable to the purposes for which they were given.

The Priory of Black Canons, founded, as before observed, by Robert de Hwlfordd, and situated in a meadow on the western bank of the river Cleddau, continued to flourish till the Dissolution, at which time its revenue was estimated at £135. 6. 1., and the site was granted to Roger and Thomas Barlow. The present remains, consisting chiefly of the skeleton of the Church and some foundations of ancient buildings, afford indications of an establishment originally of considerable extent. The Church was a spacious cruciform structure, apparently in the early style of English architecture, with a lofty central tower, supported on four noble arches, of which portions are still remaining. It appears to have been 160 feet in length from east to west, and 80 feet in breadth along the transepts, and was no less elegant than spacious, with windows composed of lancet shaped lights.

The House of the Friars Preachers occupied the site on which the Black Horse Inn, in Bridge-street, was subsequently built. Its founder, and the exact time of its erection, are unknown, but it was in existence prior to the time of Richard II., in whose reign, as already noticed, the grant of a burgage for the enlargement of the house was confirmed. To this establishment Bishop Hoton left £10, and his successor, Bishop John Gilbert, bequeathed £100, with vestments, desiring also to be interred within its walls.

The Castle, from the discovery at various times of foundations of buildings and portions of ruined walls, appears to have occupied the whole of a rocky ridge on the northern declivity of the eminence on which the town is situated; and, from its commanding site, as well as from its extent and massive walls, forms a conspicuous and imposing object, towering above all the surrounding buildings, and overlooking the town. The remains consist principally of the keep, a spacious quadrangular pile, with lofty and massive walls, and which, from the elegance of its pointed windows and other architectural embellishments, especially on the eastern side facing the river, appears to have comprised the Chapel and the state apartments, and conveys an idea of its original grandeur and magnificence. This portion of the remains has been converted into the county gaol, without in any degree detracting from its interest as a noble relic of ancient baronial splendour. In the suburb of Prendergast, on the opposite side of the river, are the remains of an ancient mansion that was inhabited by a family of that name.

an islet off the coast of Pembrokeshire, near the mouth of the Bristol Channel, forms part of the parish of St. Martin. It consists chiefly of limestone rock, and comprises an extent of about 700 acres, of which a considerable portion, let to a resident tenant, is in a state of cultivation; it is plentifully supplied with water, and abounds with rabbits. This islet, which forms the northern limit of St. St Bride's Bay, is separated by a strait about a mile and a half in breadth, called broad Sound, from the islet of Shokham, which is about three miles from the main land, and about five miles west-by-south from the mouth of Milford Haven.

Sir John Perrot Grant to Haverfordwest

Sir John was born at Haroldston House, the ruin which is visible on the south side of Freeman's Way. He is said to have been a natural son of King Henry VIII by Mary Berkeley, "a royal lady-in-waiting who was of the King's familiarity". He was the town's greatest benefactor. Among other appointments, he was President of Munster and Lord President of Ireland. In 1592 he was found guilty of treason, but he died in the Tower of London before sentence of death could be carried out.

Sir John had a great love for Haverfordwest and he always took a prominent part in its administration. He was Mayor three times and in 1588 was its Member of Parliament.

During his lifetime the town attained great prosperity. It contained many men of enterprise and foresight, and the Queen's Surveyor described it, "The best buylt, the most civill and quickest occupied towne in South Wales". George Owen of Henllys, Lord of Kemes, the County Historian, stated that "Haverfordwest is a good towne, wealthie and well governed".

With its seven guilds and the many productive activities in the town many merchants built up a lucrative and foreign trade, and in this Sir John was intimately interested.

It is therefore not surprising that being so engrossed in the town's prosperity and future development he should endow the town with a princely gift the benefits from which it still happily enjoys.

As will be seen from the grant, he directed that the rents and profits derived from the messuages, lands and tenements devised therein were to be expended to the improvement of the Town of Haverfordwest, and to the repair of the Streets, bridges, walls, conduits of water, and all other dilapidations of Haverfordwest as well as to the rebuilding of the new Quay in the town and all other useful works which may be needful or suitable for the improvement of the town.

The original document which is written in Latin inscribed on parchment is in excellent condition and is now displayed on the wall in the Mayor's Parlour in the Corporation Offices and interesting, it has Sir John's seal attached.

In May 1899 the Deed was translated by Henry Owen esq., D.C.L. (Oxon), F.S.A,

To all the Faithful in Christ to whom this Present Deed shall come,

John Perrot of Haroldston, in the County of Pembroke, Knight, (wishes) eternal salvation in the Lord. 1644 The Civil War and Haverfordwest (Arch Camb 1898 Rev J Phillips)

At the outbreak of the Civil War, Pembroke was being held for the Parliament and the rest of the county by the Royalists.

1644 It was not until 1644 that there were any serious hostilities in Pembrokeshire. In February 1644 the Parliamentarians, reinforced by Swanley's squadron, assumed the offensive. On the evening of the victory at Pille near Milford the Royalist scouts at Haverfordwest mistook a drove of cattle returning from their pasture on Merlin's Hill for the victorious enemy. The cry was raised that the Roundheads were coming, and the garrison abandoned the Castle without firing a shot. In July, Gerard recaptured the town, but it was recovered by Laugharne in the autumn.

1645 August 1 The Royalists were totally defeated by Laugharne at Colby Moor six miles to the east. Next day Haverfordwest was occupied and on the 4th the Castle was stormed.

1647 there was an Amazonian riot in Haverfordwest. The Parliamentary Commissioners of Excise being compelled to fly for their lives before a mob of infuriated women.

Captain Goffe, the future regicide was an old 'Harfat bot' and he and his men were feted on their arrival.

1648 When Pembroke had fallen, Cromwell rode over to Haverfordwest, and was cordially received by the Council who had already sent him a cask of cider as a present; but nothing would induce him to recall the order for the partial demolition of the Castle.

Haverfordwest Throughout the revolutionary period complained bitterly of the heavy assessments for the support of the army, which, following on the losses of the war taxed their resources to the utmost.

Yet in spite of all they had suffered under the revolutionary governments, when the reaction of 1660 came the republican candidate was defeated only by deliberate and shameless fraud on the part of the council and the returning officer.

1811 The Castle, Fenton, Tours

The Castle and I think justly, is ascribed to Gilbert, Earl of Clare, the first undoubted Earl of Pembroke, who, about the year 1113, Temp. Henry I had the conduct of one third part of an army raised by that Monarch, who led the other two parts in person against North Wales, so that to provide sufficient garrisons for such a force it became necessary to increase the fortified strength of the country by raising new Castle, and at this period probably Haverfordwest Castle was built, and that of Pembroke began to assume something of the form and magnificence its present ruins shew it to have possessed. There is reason to suppose that after the creation of his Earldom, he made Pembroke Castle his principal residence, yet there is unquestionable evidence that he occasionally resided in that of Haverford as Giraldus gives us a curious anecdote of the earl's son, when a boy in that Castle. He tells us that in his time (Henry II) a famous robber was confined in one of the towers and was often visited by three boys, the son of the Earl of Clare and two others, one of whom was the son of the Lord of the Castle and the other his grandson, sent there for their education. The robber was in the habit of making arrows for the boys, and one day, being brought from his dungeon, he shut himself up with the boys. A great clamour instantly arose as well from the boys within, as from the people without nor did he desist with an uplifted axe, to threaten the lives of the children, until indemnity and security were assured him in the most ample manner.

Gilbert, Earl of Clare appointed Richard Fitz Tancred as his Castellan, or governor of the Castle and conferred on him the seignory of Haverfordwest, whose posterity, or rather whose name continued in this county so late as the time of Charles I.

Very little more of the Castle now remains than the Keep, we are justified in supposing the part destroyed to have been commensurate and worthy of its illustrious founder. By the fragments of ruined walls, foundations and vaults discovered at different times, it appears to have occupied all the ridge extending from St Martin's eastward towards the river, having on each side, north and south a deep ravine, whose margin the outer wall, flanked with bastions, followed, and may be terminated by the Keep, which, if we may judge from the elegant pointed windows, and other rich finishings of the whole eastern side facing the estuary, seemed to have included the Chapel, the governor's apartments, and other rooms of state that must have been very large and handsome. This superb portion of the Castle is now converted into a county jail.

1839 Castle Topographical Dictionary of Wales Lewis

The town grew in the shadow of the Castle, "a verie proper pyle buylt uppon a rocke" of Silurian sandstone that commands the Ford and the surrounding countryside. On such a site one would have expected to find an Iron Age promontory fort, and as the tide reaches as far as here, there may have been visitations by the marauding Norse, but there is no evidence of any pre-Norman settlement. By the thirteenth century Haverford was a thriving Market town with the defended borough of Castleton extending to the west and north of the Castle. In the 14th century the town expanded beyond the town walls but began to decline following the Black Death of 1349. Even so, by the outbreak of the English Civil War nearly 300 years later (1642-8), Haverfordwest was considered to have been the third-largest town in Wales. Following that war the town became crippled by debt, particularly when the demolition of the Castle was ordered by Oliver Cromwell and had to be paid for by the town. This has, however, led to the distinctive appearance of many of Haverfordwest's buildings, constructed from masonry plundered from the Castle. The Castle was able to withstand all assaults by the Welsh. It escaped the devastation of west Wales by Llywelyn the Great in 1215, but that prince returned in 1220 and burned the town "up to the gate of the Castle". It survived again, in 1405, the assault of the French expedition that had landed in Milford Haven to aid Owain Glyn Dwr, when they destroyed the town by fire.

It is recorded that the Great Sessions were held in the Castle in 1575, but a survey carried out two years later indicates that it was in a ruinous condition.

At the outbreak of the Civil War, in 1642, Haverfordwest was held for the Parliament but, in the following year, it was occupied by the Earl of Carbery for the King, only to be recaptured by the Parliamentary forces six months later. The Royalists returned in 1645 but, soon after, they were routed at Colby Moor, outside the town. In 1648 Cromwell ordered the Castle, though "not tenable for the service of the State, and yet that it may be used by ill affected persons to the prejudice of the peace of these parts", to be demolished, and urged the Mayor and Aldermen to act with speed otherwise he would settle a garrison there at the expense of the town. The mayor, John Prynn, asked him for powder to do so, which the Lord Protector presumably supplied. As the Castle was already ruinous, the mayor's task was not onerous.

1922 The Castle RCAM

The Castle occupies a commanding site upon an elevated plateau overlooking the western Cleddeau and the town of Haverfordwest. Of the original structure there remains only the outerwalls and angle towers. All the interior buildings were removed in the 18th century when the Castle was adapted to the uses of a goal.

Its construction has been attributed to Gilbert de Clare Earl of Pembroke (died 1115) and it is highly probable that a strong mound Castle was erected by one of the de Clares; but in its general features the present structure dates from the latter years of the 13th century, when its builder would doubtless have been earl William de Valence (died 1296). a plan in Arch Camb (1922 VII ii 450) shows the building to have been almost a square, the enclosed area being about 110ft by 95ft.

The blocked east window of the Chapel, which was placed in the south east angle tower, was opened out in 1912 by the Association for the Preservation of Ancient Monuments in the County of Pembroke. It appears to have been a fine four lighted window of the Decorated period of which portions of the Jambs and mouldings still remain; the tracery has disappeared. A small two lighted window with relics of later stone dressings was also uncovered.

The Castle was unsuccessfully besieged by Owen Glyndwr in 1405 During the Parliamentary troubles it was held for the King but fell in 1645 and in 1648 Cromwell ordered its demolition – Visited 6th August 1920.

Haverfordwest Churches

In the town are three churches, St Mary's St Thomas 's and St Martin's, besides the Church of Prendergast in the suburb; and in Bridge St there was a house of Black Friar preachers; (Fenton tour 1811)

Within the walls there were only two churches, St Mary's and St Martin's and St Mary's was the principal Church – the town Church – but St Martin's was the older.

St Thomas 's was without the walls, looking down from its Hill top on the large Church of the Priory by the Riverside, the 'greater Church of St Thomas the Martyr' for both were dedicated to the murdered archbishop.

St. Martin.

St Martin of Tours is the earliest of the town's parish churches and the foundation of the Church dedicated to St Thomas a Becket can be dated towards the end of the 12th century as its dedicatee was Canonized in 1173.

1811 St Martin's Church Fenton, Tours

St Martin's Church appears to have been the first built, as almost appendant to the Castle and consequently surrounded with the first habitations. It consists of a nave, chancel, and south aisle with a tower and stone spire. The nave is long and lofty, plain roofed, so is the chancel separated from the nave by a fine old arch up to the roof. Of the windows there is no judging either of their size, shape, or former tracery, as many are entirely stopped, and most if not all, of the remainder contracted and otherwise transformed.

In the chancel you see in a very perfect state the recessed stalls for the officiating priests on the south side, and on the north under a plain canopy, a thick tomb of grey stone, so much obscured and defaced that nothing of what it once represented can be correctly made out; but I have the satisfaction to be able to supply this defect from the MS account of a gentleman, Mr Dinely, who was in the suite of the Duke of Beaufort, when he made his progress through Wales in 1684 and shall beg leave to give it in his own words:- 'In the chancel, on a stone about a foot above the pavement, is a figure as large as life, with priestly habit and tonsure, having the shew of a pilgrim, with staff and scrip, whereon are discernible three cockle shells; but whether by them are meant his arms of they denote any particular religious order, I leave to the curious. It has no inscription' and this last circumstance proves that the dates of 1587 and 1707 with the name George Eynon now appearing on it but in Mr Dinely's time not existing, are evidently unconnected with the age or cause of its erection.

There is besides a marble mural tablet to some of the family of Le Hunt, and another to a respectable Clergyman of the name of Harries.

This was once part of the possessions of the Priory of Haverfordwest, and is now a vicarage in the patronage of Hugh Webb Bowen esq. of Camros, the rectorial tythes belonging to him as lay-impropriator.

St Martin's was very thoroughly restored about thirty two years ago; but even the building that was then destroyed was in great part of much later date than the original Church which was probably coeval with the Castle. The lower part of the tower is apparently the oldest part of the building remaining. The west window (Perpendicular) is supposed to be pre Reformation. There is also in the south wall of the Church a narrow single light window, trefoil headed, which was part of the old Church. In the south aisle of the chancel there is another four light window; on either side of this are projected shelves of stone which like a similar shelf in the east wall of the chancel may have been used to support stone effigies. There is in the chancel a fine piscina, the canopy trefoil-headed and the carving being very elaborate. There is also a triple sedilia equally fine. In the end of the south wall of the chancel there is a large hagioscope, and underneath is a piscina. In a recess in the north wall of the chancel there has been placed a large slab with two floriated crosses. The date 1587 is certainly not that of the slab but may be the date of the inscription which disfigures its lower part and states that 'here lyeth the body of Geo Eynon 17 of November' Over the porch there is a large chamber, without any inscription or ornament, but containing a recess vulgarly called the Penitentiary.

St. Martin's Church, Acc/to Pembrokeshire Parsons.

recognizable by its octagonal stone steeple, is the oldest, sited near the Castle and within the walls of the Castle borough of Castleton. Its dedication to St. Martin of Tours also indicates a foundation early in the twelfth century. The Lady Chapel was added in the fourteenth, as well as a priest's chamber over the porch. Below the squint is a medieval piscina with a Tudor rose carved on the underside. A recent window displays the arms of the town and those of the Perrot's Trustees and the Gild of Freemen of Haverfordwest.

1920 The Parish Church Dedicated to St Martin RCAM

The building consists of nave 75ft by 27ft, chancel 45ft by 18ft, south aisle 48ft by 15ft, north tower 17 ½ ft square and south porch. It was originally a one-aisled Church, a south aisle of Chapel having been added in the 14th century. On the south side of the chancel are a 14th century triple sedilia and a piscina. On either side of the east window of the south aisle are the remains of niches; in the north east angle is an aumbrey. The porch with its parvise is apparently of the 14th century date. There is a hagioscope at the south-east corner of the lady Chapel. The tower has a parapet above a corbel table, and is surmounted by a stone spire. The font is modern. On the north side of the chancel is a stone coffin lid bearing in relief a floriated cross – Visited 6th August 1920

Note :- The Church of St Martin is frequently termed “the Castle Church” and it doubtless was used by the garrison and servitors after the suppression of services in the Chapel. At some unknown period it became appropriated to the priory of St Thomas to which it paid the sum of £10 per annum

There existed a chantry altar within the Church, probably in the south Chapel, which may have been constructed expressly for the service. Nothing however is recorded of this foundation.

This Church was granted by Robert, son of Richard the son of Tankard de Haverfordwest, to the Canons of St. Mary and St. Thomas the Martyr, Haverfordwest. The gift was confirmed in mortmain by the King on 8th June, 1331 - Pat. Rolls. But the original grant must have been made prior to 1256, as on 22 April in that year the Pope issued an indult to the prior and convent of St. Thomas .Haverfordwest, that the Church of St. Martin, Haverfordwest, with its Chapels, which they held to their user, be served by chaplains as hitherto appointed by them; to take effect on the death or resignation of the vicar appointed by the late Bishop Papal Reg.

In 1594 this living was in the King's hands. - Owen's Pemb.

In 1291 this Church was assessed for tenths to the King at £10, the amount payable being; £1 - Taxatio.

Haverfordwest (S. Martin). Church Plate of Pembrokeshire 1904

The mother Church of Haverford still retains its Elizabethan Chalice, but the Paten cover has disappeared. The cup is a handsome vessel of the Amroth type and larger than the usual Pembrokeshire examples. The only Mark is the maker's ^^^- The upper foliated band round the bowl intersects three times, whilst within the lower band is engraved " " POCVLVM # ECLESIE » DE * SAINTE » MARTINS ". It has the usual two bands of vertical reed moulding and a central filleted knop ornamented with intermittent lines. Height, 7 in. ; diam. of bowl, 3 in. ; depth, 4 in. ; diam. of foot, 3 in. ; weight, 10 oz. 3 dwts.

A Chalice of silver gilt and of good medieval design, Hall-marked 1878 and with maker's mark JCS in oblique stamp. The stem is hexagonal with a knop having six jewelled facets. The base is also hexagonal with moulded rim. Height, 6in.; diam. of bowl, 3in. ; depth, 3in.; diam. of foot, 4 in.; weight, 8 oz. 13 dwts. It was supplied by Pratt & Sons of London.

A Paten of silver gilt bearing the Hall Mark of 1870, the maker's mark being ^ in a square stamp. The face is ornamented with a cross within a circle, round which is inscribed "Patina Ecclesiae S.

Martin a.d. 1873." Underneath is engraved " Haverfordwest ", Diam. 6 in. ; weight, 5 oz. .

Two glass Cruets with silver mounted stoppers, Hall-marked 1881 and 1894 reflectively with maker's Mark T P. They were presented by Mr. Arthur H, de Winton.

Two pewter Plates, carrying the following marks: B & C; hands clasped; stag couchant; lion rampant; " London ". There is no trace of this maker in the London lists; they were probably made in London for a provincial pewterer. A similar Plate at Hodgeston carries the same marks and is rudely inscribed " Hotson 1786 ". Beneath both pieces are inscribed "St. Martins Church".

Four brass Alms-dishes, three of which were given by Mr. W. S. de Winton, whilst the fourth carries the legend " IT IS MORE blessed TO GIVE THAN TO RECEIVE".

Note Skomer and St Martin

An interesting feature in connection with St. Martin's is that the Island of Skomer is in the parish. When Roose was parcelled out into parishes, there was no parish to which the islands could be added, so they remained with St. Martin, the Church of the Lordship of Haverford and the Isles.

The living of St. Martins was purchased by Mr. Wilfred de Winton who gave it to the Society for the Maintenance of the Faith, the present patron.

1923 The Parish of St Mary's RCAM

The parish of St Mary's contains some of the oldest domestic structures of Haverfordwest, and it is probable that its Streets and courts are built upon the foundations, and occasionally incorporate some remains of the buildings of the medieval town . The house at the corner of High St and Market St stands upon an under Croft which may date from the 13th century. In the premises in High St at present occupied by Messrs. W H Smith and son, are the remains of an early English window, and also a couple of carved stone mantelpieces bearing heraldic devices, both dating from the end of the 16th or commencement of the 17th century. To the west of St Mary's Church is a detached building known as the Record Office, at one time believed to have been the borough recorder's court; the basement chamber is rudely vaulted. The Old Town Hall was removed in 1891. It was a building of two stories with a basement, and stood above the north gateway into the churchyard. It is alluded to in a will of 1587 as containing three rooms "the uppermost for keeping the sheire armor, the second for claeaning the same, and the vaults or lower parte in my owne hande for a woode house"

1811 St Mary's Church Fenton, Tours

St Mary's Church, situated at the upper end of High st, though the Town Hall intercepts the view of its lower part, yet when surmounted by a spire made a conspicuous figure on approaching the town, but in its present truncated state hides its diminished head. The external of the Church is such as to prepare us for what we are to see within, bearing the air of venerable cathedral like building, being leaded with a parapet all round.

It has two entrances on the north and south side, that to the north having a porch. The doorway is a pointed arch with mouldings and other decorations to match the pillars within. The Church consists of a nave, chancel, and north aisle, the whole length of the building. The nave, which is very lofty, is ceiled with oak in square compartments, curiously enriched with knots of carved foliage, and other ornaments at the intersections, the whole similar to, but richer than, that of the chancel of St David's. The nave is separated from the side aisle by moderately pointed arches resting on clustered pillars, with sculptured capitals of heads and other figures, but almost hid and fairly blunted by vile whitewash, the incrustation of frequent daubing's for several centuries. A very noble lofty arch of the same character divides the nave from the chancel. The chancel is lofty, but the ceiling of plain oak beams without ornament. In each side of the entrance into it there were eight stalls of old oak; those on the north side still exist in their original form, but the corresponding set on the south side in my time, and I believe even now used by the boys of the free-school when they attended Church, having fallen into decay, having yielded to pews or seats of more modern fashion. For what purpose they were erected I have not been able to learn, but apprehend they were an appendage to the Corporation, where some of their members and officers sat. The nave and chancel have an upper tier of windows above the arches, some lancet shaped, and others of a form indicating a later date. The east window is large, and the stone tracery rich, as are the windows in the north side aisle

The monuments seem to be confined to the chancel, and the principal belong to the Picton family. That on the north side of the communion rails is a splendid mural monument finely executed in White marble, with a highly finished bust of the deceased, to the memory of Sir John Philipps, Bart. Grandfather to the present Lord Milford.

On the south side of the chancel are the monuments of the late Sir John Philipps and others of the family. The canopied monument of ancient form and sculpture covering a raised tomb with a plain gravestone over it, inscribed round the margin to one Walter an alderman A.D. 1611. I am inclined to think, and am justified by tradition for thinking so, was erected to commemorate more ancient internments. On the same side on a tablet of black marble there is an epitaph to a physician of the name of Counsel, whose surname in the family that he became allied to by marriage in this town was afterwards adopted and retained as a Christian name.

Near is a small square tablet of brass inserted in a frame of stonework, with a figure not badly executed of a man kneeling before a desk at the top, and escutcheon of his arms in the centre and an inscription beneath to the memory of John Davids, alderman 1651.

The pavement of the chancel, as may be partially collected from inscriptions almost effaced, seem to have covered the Corporation mausoleum, as it proves the earth below thickly cropped with aldermen.

To make room for the body of Sir John Pryse of Newton Hall in Montgomeryshire, who had lived for several years and died in Haverfordwest, an effigy the lying on the floor to the north of the communion rails was removed, and is now huddled most disgracefully among the rubbish and lumber at the east end of the north aisle. The face and whole head are entirely gone, the hands uplifted as in prayer, with the drapery well executed; by the dress it appears to have been the figure of a priest.

At the west end of the nave there is a handsome gallery furnished with a noble Organ.

The Church is a rectory in the gift of the Corporation.

1895 St Mary's Church Nooks and Corners Timmins

Contrasted with the primitive structures we have seen in the country parishes, this is a noble Church indeed, having been in large part constructed during the best period of Gothic architecture. The lofty nave is covered with a flat wooden ceiling, relieved by enriched bosses at the intersections of the beams, and upborne by handsome brackets against the walls. It is connected with the adjacent aisle by a series of richly moulded arches, supported upon tall clustered pillars.

On the north side of the chancel stands a group of thirteenth century pillars and arches of still more elaborate character, whose capitals are encrusted with a variety of grotesque figures intertwined among deeply cut foliage.

Handsome traceried windows admit a flood of light into the chancel, whose walls display monuments and epitaphs of no little beauty and interest.

In a remote untended corner of the Church lies the mutilated effigy of an ecclesiastic, whose sober livery, and wallet embellished with scallop shells, mark him as a pilgrim who has crossed the seas to the shrine of St James of Compostella, in Spain

Passing out by the north porch, we observe a pair of tall, carved bench ends, on one of which St George is seen in combat with a triple headed dragon

1898 St Marys Church Arch Camb Rev J Phillips

The present Church is of the 13th century, but in it were incorporated portions of an older building.

The chancel arch is remarkably fine, and the arches between the nave and the north aisle are splendid specimens of Early English work. The 13th century Church was much lower than the present edifice. The clerestory and the fine oaken roof were added in the reign of Henry VII.

There has been more than ordinary recklessness in the destruction of monuments.

It is impossible to find more than two or three inscriptions of the 17th century. One of these occupies the place of what were no doubt sedilia.

There is a trefoil headed piscina.

The only ancient monument is the effigy lying in the west end, apparently of an ecclesiastic. This is at least of the 14th century. The tower was originally surmounted by a spire, which was taken down about a century ago. Fragments of the parish registers have been recently discovered among the municipal papers; these go back to the reign of Elizabeth I. The earliest entries are in Latin.

1913 St Mary's Church -- Wade

Of the churches of Haverfordwest the finest is St Mary's the tower of which was once surmounted by a wooden spire. It dates from the 13th century, though a fragment of a still earlier Norman building survives in the North Chancel wall and exhibits some beautiful Early English work in the chancel arch and the arcade. The west window of the nave consists of three lancets, whilst the east is a good example of Geometrical Decorative. Both the nave and the chancel have Perpendicular clerestories, added to the walls in the reign of Henry VII; and the windows of the aisle and the fine oak roof also belong to the 15th century. At the west end of the nave there is a recess of problematical origin, and near the south wall is a much worn effigy, apparently of a pilgrim (note the scallop shells on the satchel, showing that he had visited the shrine of Santiago de Compostella in Spain) Also there is a trefoiled piscina, two stalls bearing a carving of St Michael overthrowing Satan, surmounted by the Tudor Rose and poppy head probably from, Henry VII period. The East gable retains its Sanctus Bell-cote. Medieval wood carvings

1923 The Parish Church dedicated to St Mary the Virgin RCAM

The Church, which for the greater part dates from the first half of the 13th century, is essentially an English structure containing no features that can in any way represent Welsh culture at that period. Its principal ecclesiastical attractions are an Early English arcade and a late Perpendicular clerestory and roof. Though it stands next to the cathedral Church as unquestionably the noblest ecclesiastical edifice in the county, it hardly appears to have exercised hardly any influence upon the religious and social life of the district.

St Mary's Church, Haverfordwest is a substantial building the earliest part dating from the end of the 12th century. The nave, south porch and chancel are 13th century, possibly incorporating older fabric. In the 15th century the north aisle and the north-east Chapel were combined and enlarged, the north-west tower was added and the nave heightened. The tower had a lead-clad timber spire, removed in 1802 as a danger to Kensington House in Tower Hill. The interior was said to have been damaged by prisoners after the French invasion of Fishguard. The decorated arcades and chancel arch are of stone from Caen, and have been described as cathedral quality. Among the many the stone carvings are portrait heads and figures directed at the 'foreign Welsh', for example an ape playing a Welsh harp. A bench end near the chancel arch depicts St Michael slaying the dragon, originally carved abroad; it may be from the Priory by the Quay. RCAHMW

Notes Mary's Church 1890

St. Mary's is a thirteenth century Church, of cathedral proportions with a Late Perpendicular clerestory and a fine Tudor oak roof. The arcade pillar capitals have grotesques and animals, including a pig playing a fiddle and a monkey a harp. The scalloped script on a mutilated fifteenth century effigy commemorates a pilgrim to the shrine of St. James at Compostelia. There are memorials and hatchments of the Philipps family of Picton. A brass names the mayor of 1642, and a two-seater pew for the mayor and sheriff has an elaborately carved fourteenth century bench-end. The Church became a prison briefly in 1797 to house the French soldiery that had surrendered after an abortive landing near Fishguard.

1331 On 8th June 1331 King Edward III. confirmed a grant in mortmain of the following property, made by Robert son of Richard son of Tankard de Haverford to the Canons of St.

Mary and St. Thomas the Martyr of Haverfordwest: - the churches of St. Thomas , Haverford, St. Mary and St. Martin with all tithes, &c., pertaining thereto; the Chapel in the Castle for them to provide a minister for the same, to be fed at his table; his tithes of wool and cheese; his fishery, with liberty of culture in his mills, namely, that they be "scevinefreoch" and "tolfreoch"; his tithes of the mills in his demesne lands pertaining to the barony of Haverford; and certain lands defined in the letters patent - on 1st April, 1375, this grant was again confirmed, and for a third time set on record in June, 1505. - Pat. Rolls.

1256 The original grant, however, by Robert Tankard must have been made prior to 1256.

1325 On 20 Feb., 1325, licence was granted by the King for the alienation in mortmain of 5 marks of rent in Haverford by Richard de Dowystowe, to the prior and convent of Haverford to find a chaplain to celebrate divine service daily in the Chapel of St. Mary, Haverfordwest, for the souls of the faithful departed.
